Beer Flows In, More on Way

The beer's here!

The first of some 18,000 dozen cases of American suds began unloading in Victoria liquor stores this morning, and more is on the way.

Four or five stores should be well stocked with a variety of beer brands at least for a short time.

Liquor Distribution Branch (LDB) official Janet Willson said in Vancouver today the trucks were rolling and the beer should be on the shelf by this afternoon at the latest.

A Victoria branch spokesman, however, said that not all stores will get some of the beer.

Certain to get a portion of the latest shipment were outlets at Cedar Hill, Yates, in Langford and at Gorge and Tillicum.

It was going fast, though. The Fort-Foul Bay outlet sold out its allotment of 2,400 dozen cases in an hour, an official said today.

The LDB announced last week that it was bringing in 750,000 cases over and above the regular shipments of Olympia and Schlitz.

How long Victoria's 18,000 cases will last is anybody's guess.

Willson said the branch is already arranging for more beer, "but that probably won't be in until late next week because of the Monday holiday."

Meanwhile, people who wanted to import their own were getting the royal treatment at five U.S. border crossings south of Vancouver.

Quick check-out lanes were being set up to speed beer-lovers through customs.

Vince Castonguay, Vancouver manager for Canada Customs, said Thursday that 24 temporary staff have been

CANADIANS TRAVELLING OUTSIDE LESS

OTTAWA (CP) — Canadians were travelling outside the country less in June than a year earlier, while more foreign visitors made visits here, Statistics Canada reported Thursday.

There were 3.7 million U.S. visitors to Canada in June, a 4.2 per cent increase from a year ago. Visitors from other countries increased in number by 14.1 per cent to 231,000 in June.

The number of Canadians returning from U.S. visits in June was unchanged from June last year at 3.3 million. Canadian travellers returning from other countries totalled 121,500, a 1.1 per cent decrease from last June.

HAMBURG, West Germany (AP) — Police swooped down on a local fish dealer's apartment today and recovered $750,000 worth of stolen paintings.

Floods Lethal

BANDERA, Tex. (AP) — Rescue workers slogged through mud and high water today for a second day, searching for persons still missing in the wake of flood waters already blamed for at least 21 deaths.

Sub Explodes

LORIENT, France (Reuter) — One sailor was killed and five were injured, two of them seriously, when an explosion rocked the French submarine Marsouin while on a test run off this Atlantic port today, naval headquarters said.

U.S. Jobless Up

WASHINGTON (Reuter) — The Carter administration received more bad economic news today, with federal government statistics showing a sharp rise in the rate of U.S. unemployment during July, when it stood at 6.2 per cent of the work force.

Bus Chaos Mars Day 1 Of Games

EDMONTON (CP) — Visitors to the Commonwealth Games and 70,000 work-bound Edmontonians scrambled for taxis, joined car pools or used their hitch-hiking thumbs today when they woke up to find the city temporarily without transit service because of strike action.

The transportation chaos was expected to end this afternoon after the provincial board of industrial relations granted an application by the City of Edmonton for a cease-and-desist order to the transit workers, compelling them to return to work immediately.

The board order came shortly before 10 a.m. PDT, about six hours after the picket lines were set up.

The Games were heading into their first competition day after Thursday's official opening by the Queen when striking electrical workers employed by this city of a half million population set up picket lines about 4 a.m. PDT at car barns.

The transit system, including the new seven-kilometre light rail transit line that goes right past Commonwealth Stadium, carried more than 40,000 persons to the opening ceremonies at the stadium.

The athletes faced no transportation problem as they were using school buses operated by private companies.

Yellow Cab, the city's major taxi company, sent 480 of its 500 cars out this morning after hearing the news.

Public reaction was mostly negative.

One individual, angry with the electricians' actions, decided to take matters into his own hands.

Just before 7 a.m., the man, cursing at the top of his lungs, drove his car at picketing electrical workers near a city bus garage. Although he did not hit anyone, he grabbed at one striker's picket sign and came so close to another that the worker spilled a cup of coffee.

The man drove about a block, turned his vehicle around and made another run at the workers.

Queen Elizabeth quietly wrapped up the ninth day of her Canadian tour Thursday, meeting Commonwealth Games volunteer officials at an evening reception after officially opening the Games earlier in the day.

Meanwhile, in London, Premier Peter Lougheed of Alberta was criticized by the Daily Telegraph for his behavior while in the company of the royal visitors.

After "two days of annoying behavior, Lougheed committed "the ultimate breach of etiquette" by joining the royal motorcade in an open-top car.

Moscow Wants Defector

VIENNA (Reuter) — Western diplomatic sources said today the Soviet Union has demanded the return of diplomat Arkadi Shevchenko, Moscow's top civil servant at the United Nations until he refused to go home last April, in exchange for Soviet dissident Anatoly Shcharansky.

The sources told Reuters news agency that Moscow, acting through East bloc intermediaries, proposed Shevchenko after a Soviet plan to swap Shcharansky for three Communist spies detained in the West ran aground.

However, Shevchenko today ridiculed the reported proposal his U.S. lawyer said.

"He laughed when I called him and told him about it; he said it's ridiculous," the Washington lawyer said.

Shevchenko, 47, was serving as UN undersecretary general for political and Security Council affairs when he refused to return home in April and dropped out of sight in the United States, complaining of differences of opinion with the Kremlin.

His lawyer commented: "You don't exchange free men for prisoners. He has no interest or desire to return to the Soviet Union. He is a free man here and our government has no right whatsoever to bargain for any exchange concerning him. I think it's preposterous."

Most Flights Normal

Canadian Press

Air Canada ground-service workers in Toronto and most airports in the Atlantic provinces returned to work today, ending a walkout that disrupted airline operations in most of Eastern Canada and parts of the northern United States for two days.

About 1,700 workers in Toronto returned to work midnight Thursday night and 200 workers in Halifax, Fredericton, St. John's, Nfld., and Stephenville, Nfld., returned to work today.

Although 3,600 workers in Montreal have extended their walkout to Saturday, airline spokesman Jocelyn Dumont-Jerome said service is expected to be normal in Montreal.

She said 102 flights, about 85 per cent of scheduled flights, were to operate today. Passengers who were to go on flights that were cancelled will be put on other flights.

About 160 clerical and management personnel are doing the work of the ground-service employees today, she said.

Earlier Thursday in Vancouver, a spokesman for ground-service workers in western Canada said they will not engage in any work stoppages until results of a ratification vote on the company's latest contract offer are known.

Operations were almost normal in the East, although workers in Saint John, N.B., left the job early today. An Air Canada spokesman said supervisory personnel were being used to maintain normal operations there.

Four flights into the Maritimes, however, were cancelled because of the continuing walkout in Montreal and four flights to Montreal from the Maritimes also were cancelled.

Thorpe Charged With Murder Plot

LONDON (Reuter) — Jeremy Thorpe, former leader of the British Liberal party, was charged today with conspiracy to commit murder, a police spokesman said.

In the biggest political scandal to rock British politics in recent years, Thorpe, 49, was charged with conspiring with three others to kill a former friend, one-time male model Norman Scott.

Thorpe, who resigned from the Liberal leadership in May, 1976, after holding the post since 1967, has always strenuously denied allegations of a homosexual affair with Scott.

He resigned from the job five months after Scott, 35, said in a courtroom outburst that he was being hounded because they once had an affair.

The charges were filed at the west England port of Minehead, not far from Scott's home, the police spokesman said.

The spokesman identified those charged with Thorpe as David Holmes, 47, former deputy treasurer of the Liberal party; John le Mesurier, 44, a businessman, and George Deakin, a businessman from South Wales.

The spokesman said all four would appear in court later today at Minehead.

A brief police statement said the four "were taken into custody at Minehead police station and have been charged with conspiracy to murder Mr. Norman Scott."

The charges came after a long police investigation into allegations that the four men plotted to kill Scott.

In October, 1977, former airline pilot Andrew Newton told newspapers he had been paid $10,000 by a prominent Liberal supporter to kill Scott.

"I was hired to kill Scott because his story of a homosexual relationship with Thorpe would be disastrous," he claimed.

Even after Thorpe resigned as leader of Britain's third-largest party in 1976, he remained one of his party's 13 members of Parliament and its spokesman on foreign affairs.

Only last Wednesday he made an impassioned speech on Rhodesia to the House of Commons.

MPs have no immunity against criminal charges.

The scandal could have a dramatic effect on the outcome of the general election expected in October, since the Liberals have held the balance of power in Parliament for more than four years.

Today, with a policeman sitting on either side of him, Thorpe was driven from his Devon constituency to Minehead to be charged.

Purchase Pushes Dollar

MONTREAL (CP) — The Canadian dollar gained on New York money markets for the first time in more than a week Thursday after a private corporation bought heavily into the sagging currency.

The dollar closed at 88.09 cents U.S. in active trading on the inter-bank wholesale market.

Traders said the Montreal-based corporation had a surplus of American funds on hand and exchanged them for "$50 million to $100 million."

The dollar had been declining in value against its American counterpart since July 25 and reached a three-month low Wednesday.

Meanwhile, the United States dollar dropped slightly on the European and Japanese foreign-exchange markets today, while gold opened lower but gained as the dollar slipped.

Gold, after opening in London at $201 U.S. an ounce, rose to $201.35 at the morning price fixing by the five major bullion dealers. The closing price Thursday was $202.75.

And in New York a stock buying spree Thursday set a Wall Street volume record and pushed stock prices to their highest levels of the year.

"I think we are having the greatest buying panic we have ever seen in the market," said Alan Poole, an analyst.

Huge Settlement Ends Bennett Dam Case

VANCOUVER (CP) — One of the longest cases in Canadian legal history ended Thursday when British Columbia Hydro agreed to pay six companies a total of $33.95 million for extra expenses incurred during construction of the W. A. C. Bennett Dam.

The out-of-court settlement came six months before the 11-year-old Peace River power plant damage suit was to go before the Supreme Court of Canada.

Hydro officials refused to elaborate on a terse, four-sentence statement by company chairman Robert Bonner announcing the settlement. Bonner was not available for comment.

A consortium of six companies which built the underground powerhouse at Hydro's Peace River dam launched the action in 1967 claiming extra payment of $51 million for alleged interference by Hydro after contract prices were set for the Portage Mountain section of the project.

The companies, under the name of Northern Powerplant Builders (NPB), said Hydro's interference caused construction delays putting them to additional expenses in completing the work by a contract deadline which Hydro refused to extend.

The NPB consortium included Morrison-Knudsen Company Inc., Morrison-Knudsen Company of Canada

Walt Disney to Rescue Confederation?

QUEBEC (CP) — Quebec Environment Minister Marcel Leger says the federal government has given Walt Disney Productions a $2-million contract to prepare television advertising to promote Canadian unity in Quebec's coming independence referendum.

"The federal government, via our token francophones who represent the tip of the iceberg of Anglo-Saxon power in the federal regime, already has a propaganda program with a $50-million budget including a project given to the Walt Disney firm at a cost of $2 million for televised advertising very soon," Leger said in an interview Thursday.

He gave no further details.

In Ottawa, a spokesman in Prime Minister Trudeau's office denied as "a fabrication" Leger's statement that the federal government is financing a TV advertising campaign against Quebec independence under contract to Walt Disney Productions, or that there is a $50 million federal propaganda budget.

The Canadian Unity Information Office said a similar report had surfaced earlier this year. "It surely isn't us and I haven't got a clue what that could possibly be," a spokesman said in reference to the TV campaign.

Leger said the pro-independence side in the referendum campaign faces five chief obstacles; the massive opposition of English-speaking voters, hostility from the business world, federal intervention, "negative" action from the news media and, among pro-independence forces, overconfidence, lack of organization and discipline.

"The banks, finance companies, insurance companies, employers' groups, chambers of commerce and big companies . . . are getting their personal interests mixed up with the interests of Quebecers.

"And their influence is very great because they use their position to influence public opinion.

The federal government unity office, set up last year, has an annual budget of $10 million. Other departments and agencies are pouring additional millions into the propaganda war, including such items as the $4.5 million spent on Dominion Day festivals this summer.

Store Detectives 'Harassing' Aged

Elderly Victorians suspected of shoplifting are being subjected to severe harassment by private investigators hired by stores, Community Diversion Centre director Llona O'Gorman said today.

She said some suspects are guilty, others are innocent and all are treated more harshly than necessary.

"Private investigators are creating serious traumas over a 35-cent item, the whole thing has gotten out of hand."

The diversion centre, at 610 Gorge East, is a private organization funded by the provincial government that resolves cases of suspected shoplifting without involving the courts.

Mrs. O'Gorman said a study of suspected shoplifting offences during the past year showed this evidence of undue harassment:

— One 65-year-old man reprimanded for not paying for an item under $1 was lectured so severely he suffered a heart attack.

— A private investigator detained an elderly man for an extended period and denied his request to use the washroom. The elderly man wet his pants.

— A woman, 54, accused of taking 79 cents worth of seed packets from a store had the $5 worth of groceries she paid for taken from her.

— A 67-year-old widow with a severe back problem was kept standing, in agony, for almost an hour after she was found to have not paid for a 35-cent magazine. The woman said hadn't realized she didn't pay for it.

— A 64-year-old woman with high blood pressure being detained as a shoplifting suspect was denied permission to take a pill prescribed by her doctor.

"It's true that not everyone is totally innocent," Mrs. O'Gorman said. "But some are innocent and all are treated more severely than necessarily.

"Private investigators hired by Victoria stores believe they have to put the fear of God into these people. With elderly citizens, this can create very serious results."

She said treatment of suspects should match the severity of the alleged offence.

She said some private investigators appear to try to justify their salaries by catching as many suspects as possible, even when the evidence is slender.

If stores seriously wish to reduce shoplifting, she said, they should hire a larger staff to look after the merchandise and to serve customers.

"You don't find shoplifting in the exclusive, expensive shops. Everything is watched carefully. It is the mass marketing stores with a small staff that creates an atmosphere where shoplifting can take place."

She also urged stores to ask their security officers to treat elderly people with consideration and respect, even if shoplifting is suspected.

She said case studies of actions by private security officers in Victoria clearly shows undue harassment of elderly people.

She said many of the cases involved Can-Am Investigations Ltd., a private security firm in Victoria.

Can-Am president Larry Scott today said: "We do not abuse senior citizens. We do not arrest anybody. We detain them until the police arrive. Naturally some of these people get very upset."

Scott said Can-Am has been pleased to co-operate with the diversion centre because this is a way shoplifting cases can be handled without charges being laid and the courts becoming involved.

He said the firm could lay a charge in all cases but in most instances of first offenders it permits a transfer to the diversion centre where the suspect can make restitution through various means.

STRONG QUAKES HIT

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two widely-separated and strong earthquakes struck Thursday but damage and injury reports were still sketchy today.

One jolted northern Chile Thursday afternoon, the U.S. Geological Survey reported.

The survey said the quake was measured at a magnitude of 6.7 on the Richter scale.

The centre of the tremor was about 250 kilometres south of the coastal city of Antofagasta and the focus was about 100 km beneath the ground, officials said.

There were no immediate reports of damage or injuries but a quake of magnitude 6 can cause severe damage and a 7 is considered a major quake.

The other struck in the border area between the Soviet Union and Mongolia early Thursday, the Hagfors Observatory of Sweden said.

The quake, near the Baikal Lake, had a magnitude of 6.2 on the Richter scale, the observatory added.

No reports were immediately available from the Soviet Union on any resulting casualties or damage.

The Richter scale is a measure of ground motion as recorded on seismographs. Every increase of one number means a tenfold increase in magnitude. Thus a reading of 7.5 reflects an earthquake 10 times stronger than one of 6.5.

Chemical Leak Evacuation 'Too Late'

NIAGARA FALLS, N.Y. (AP) — New York state officials vow to spare no expense to evacuate families from their chemically poisoned homes, but hundreds of frightened residents of the tidy Love Canal district say the rescue is too little, too late.

Gov. Hugh Carey has asked President Carter to declare the neighborhood of small white clapboard houses a federal disaster area. Carey said toxic chemicals dumped there 30 years ago have created a "crisis of horrendous proportions."

Carey's appeal came following a state health department report noting a high incidence of miscarriages and birth defects in the area abutting a filled canal once used as a dump for chemical wastes. The state stopped short of ordering an evacuation, but warned pregnant women and families with infants younger than two to move out.

Carey told President Carter that as many as 500 homes may be imperiled by the chemicals that ooze up from the old canal.

Thomas Frey, state director of operations, promised more than 600 irate Love Canal homeowners Thursday that the 35 families with pregnant women or infants will be moved into alternative housing "as soon as physically possible."

Frey said that shelter under considertion includes subsidized public housing and houses on the private market, either for sale or for rent. He did not elaborate.

Frey said New York officials will meet at the White House next Wednesday to plot strategy with federal disaster, housing and environmental officials.

But the tormented residents of Love Canal were not pacified.

"I don't care how they do it; I want out," said Bonnie Snyder. "My three-year-old adopted daughter is healthy, thank God, but I want her out of here. I will never feel safe here again."

Terrence McCartney lives one block from the field that spouts puddles of chemical sewage. He stormed from the meeting.

"My wife is eight months pregnant," he said. "It's too late now. She's been here all the time. What are they going to do about that? If the damage is done, man, the damage is done."

The three-hour meeting between Frey and residents was held in the auditorium of the 99th Street Elementary School, which abuts the canal. The board of education said Thursday the school will not open in September because of the chemicals.

SPACE CHILD PLANNED?

BOCHUM, West Germany (Reuter) — The Soviet Union may be planning to breed a child in space, a West German space expert said Thursday.

Heinz Kaminski, from the space observatory here, said he had no indications the Russians were actually preparing to have a child conceived and born in space.

"But if you put all the mosaics of the history of Russian space research together, it is logical that the next step will be to prove that creating life in space is possible without causing genetic damage," he said.

The marriage of cosmonauts Andrian Nikolayev and Valentina Tereschkova after their separate space missions in 1962 and 1963 could have been part of the preparation, said Kaminski.

He said the couple, who already have a child, had been put through a variety of tests to discover if space flight had any genetic ill-effects.

Cairo Radio Blasts Begin

CAIRO, Egypt (UPI) — The state-run Cairo radio denounced Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin today as a "racist dictator" and political schizophrenic.

The radio commentary was one of the harshest personal attacks on the Israeli leader since peace negotiations between Egypt and Israel collapsed last January.

Recalling Begin's record as an undergound leader before the creation of Israel in 1948, the radio said: "When a racist dictator like Begin jumps to the seat of power, he must revise all his terroristic policies and practices of yore."

But Begin's conduct as Prime Minister shows this has not been the case, it said.

"Begin is suffering from schizophrenia," it said. "The catastrophe lies in the fact that he never stops talking about peace but at the same time he never stops talking about so-called Israeli security which, to him, means that peace and (retention of occupied Arab) land are inseparably linked."

FORD SLATES FIRST 1978s FOR RECALL

DETROIT (AP) — Ford Motor Co. announced a recall Thursday of the first 1,475,000 cars and light trucks it built in North America during the 1978 model year to correct an emissions defect recently reported in Ward's Engine Update, a bimonthly trade publication.

A valve in the emissions control system might become disengaged and release gasoline fumes into the air, said the company.

Company spokesman Chuck Gumushian said the problem was first noticed by the California Air Resources Board last November. Ford investigated and made assembly line changes in mid-February, he said.

The recall covers all 1978-model domestically built cars and light trucks built before the February change was made, said Gumushian.

All 64 Escape In Jet Crash

BUENOS AIRES (AP) — A Chilean jetliner from New York crashed and burned in a fog-shrouded wooded area as it was landing at an airport near this Argentine capital, but police said all 64 occupants escaped.

Police said 28 persons were injured, and 10 of them were admitted to hospital.

Ataliva Fernandez, director of Ezeiza Airport, said the fog apparently caused the pilot of the Lan-Chile Boeing 707 to stray from his assigned descent route. The plane's right wing struck a tree, he said.

John Wekens, a U.S. businessman whose wife suffered a back injury, said they were sitting by an emergency exit door and were among the first to escape from the wreckage.

"As I opened the door I noticed a fire in the rear of the plane," he said. "But everyone was well organized getting out. After five to eight minutes the entire aircraft burst into flames.

"If the body of the plane had hit the tree, it would have been a total tragedy."

Other passengers said there was no warning.

Fire engines and ambulances arrived after the occupants were out.

The flight, Lan-Chile 141, left New York at 10 p.m. Wednesday.

Ontario Succeeds In Luring Ford Co.

TORONTO (CP) — A high-stake poker game between U.S. and Canadian officials ended Thursday when Ford Motor Co. of Canada confirmed it has decided to build a new plant in southern Ontario instead of Ohio.

Premier William Davis announced that Ford has rejected a site in Lima, Ohio, for the $535-million engine plant and accepted a $68-million cash incentive to build on this side of the border.

Davis said he did not know where the company will build the plant but a Ford official said Windsor is among possibilities.

The plant, to employ 2,600, generate 2,400 related jobs and pay about $60 million a year in taxes, is Ford of Canada's largest investment since it was founded in 1904, president Roy F. Bennett said Thursday.

Meanwhile, a delegation of U.S. officials arrived in Ottawa late Thursday for a meeting today, originally planned to protest against luring the company with cash.

Fred Bergsten, assistant U.S. treasury secretary and member of the delegation, would not comment Thursday. However, he said his trip still is necessary because there are other issues to discuss.

He said in a speech in Washington last week that the U.S. would not sit by while Ottawa offered such incentives to lure companies north.

Later in the week, Michael Blumenthal, U.S. treasury secretary, phoned Ford executives and federal Finance Minister Jean Chretien to make his government's position known.

Ford said originally that it needed an incentive of $75 million to locate in Ontario. About 60 per cent of the $68 million it accepted Thursday will come from the federal government.

Ontario will pay $28 million.

Davis said that while his government would have preferred not to deal in direct financial incentives, it would have been negligent if it had not used every means to secure the plant for Ontario.

Good News or Bad News?

Self-fulfilling prophecies are common in politics and especially in economics — if a well-known research institute predicts that the economy is about to improve, the confidence inspired by the prediction may be a key factor in helping that improvement come about. Similarily, if the researchers predict an economic downturn, the resulting hesitance and caution may hasten the downturn.

It should thus be good news that the internationally-known Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) has forecast good economic news for Canada for the next little while. Said the OECD's annual economic survey of Canada:

"On present indications, the next 12 months are likely to see some further improvement in cost and external trade performance and some recovery in domestic demand.

"Helped by indirect tax cuts, the inflation rate should come down in 1978 and a further substantial improvement in the country's labor-cost position seems likely despite the fact that direct wage and price controls are being phased out."

In absolute terms, this is indeed good news. While admitting that Canada's economic performance in 1977 was "disappointing," it gives every reason to believe that the next 12 months will be better. Our competitive position on world markets has improved, partly because of the low position of the Canadian dollar, and this can lead only to a better economy over-all.

However, it seems that the OECD forecast may not only not be a self-fulfilling prophecy but may be the direct opposite — a prediction that fails to come true simply because it has been made.

The reason for this is the emphasis the OECD puts concurrently on small wage increases and much increased corporate profits. Partly because there are not expected to be huge wage jumps, "it is likely the more export-oriented companies will experience an above average rise in profits," the report says.

That statement, made in public where it is certain to be read by union leaders, is surely the economic equivalent of waving a red flag in front of a bull. Since the introduction of wage-and-price controls in 1975, workers have believed they have suffered more from the government's anti-inflation program than have their employers. At least in the past few months this has certainly been obvious as workers have been receiving wage increases of only four to six per cent a year while the cost-of-living has been rising almost twice that fast.

Workers have, in large part, been reluctantly ready to accept this inequity because they have been convinced that Canada's economic situation is terrible, that their employers are generally not doing well either, and that an insistence on higher wage increases could lead to plant closures, layoffs and higher unemployment.

Their attitude of acceptance is likely to vanish at the speed of light if they believe, because such an illustrious organization as the OECD tells them so, that their companies are making greatly increased profits while they fall further and further behind. If that were to become a generally-accepted belief, Canada might well be faced with high wage demands, many labor disruptions, and eventually, a truly horrendous new round of inflation.

The workers are unlikely to delve deeply into the nuances of the wages/profits dichotomy, to realize that the increased profits are necessary to prevent Canada from falling back into a recession.

We hope our country's union leaders do not adopt a simplistic view of the OECD report that will prompt them to take action that could turn the OECD's good news into very bad news indeed.

A Good Example

When the photograph of Health Minister Bob McClelland turning the first sod for an addition to the Priory extended care hospital appeared in the Times Thursday, some of us wondered at the impostor wielding the shovel. Could this slim, svelte person be the health minister, last seen in public more barrel-shaped than thin?

It could be, and it it was. Practising what his ministry preaches, McClelland has lost 50 pounds in the last few months. He's stopped smoking and drinking and started exercising.

He says he's cut out "everything that's fun" but he's never felt better. His lifespan has also probably been extended considerably.

But the most important dividend is the example he's setting for the hundreds of thousands of British Columbians who are out of shape and overweight and "addicted" to slow killers like alcohol and tobacco.

They ought to make a poster with before and after pictures of his achievement and distribute thousands of copies to schools and offices everywhere in the province. A suggested headline: "If I can do it, so can you."

They Heard Him, All Right

FISHKILL, N.Y. — In an echoing meeting hall at the Fishkill Correctional Centre here, an inmate called Duke glared menacingly around a half-circle of 12 teenager youths, white and black. They stared back at him with blank faces, somehow more defiant in their apparent boredom than they might have been in anger.

"How many you guys think you're goin' to jail?" Duke demanded. No one moved or spoke.

"Nobody?" Duke said, in mock surprise. "Nobody's goin' to jail? How many you guys smoke herb?" A few hands went up. "How many been in trouble with the po'leece?" More hands went up. Feet shuffled.

Law of Life

"I can tell you," Duke said. he gestured at several inmates in green prison garb sitting behind him. His voice rose. "My brothers can tell you. You goin', man. You hangin' out with a bunch of dudes, you got to go. That's the law of life. he looked around the circle again, spoke quietly, earnestly. "Hangin' out ruint me."

"Yeah," said Lonnie Wilkins, another inmate, who followed Duke to the centre of the circle. "I was your age, I was playin' a lot of hooky, drinkin' that liquor, hangin' out. Got caught stealin' shoes, the judge sent me to trainin' school, only it was a prison for children. I came out of there really tough, muggin', robbin', hangin' out. I thought I was slick, man."

He told the boys about doing a stretch in Comstock ("You got to fight your way through that joint"), about his drug habit ("I was willin' to kill somebody to get it or get killed trying to get it") and about the day he got caught sticking up a drugstore, when a policeman held a pistol barrel against his head and told him: "If you move a muscle, I'll blow your brains out."

Then Lonnie heard somebody saying: "Please, don't kill me, please."

"That was me talkin'," Lonnie said. "Man, that killed my tough-guy image of myself right there." He was turned down when he tried to cop a plea for a five-to-10-year sentence, went to trial, and got 10-to-20 instead.

"I don't even see the parole board for 10 years," Lonnie told the boys, slumped in their hard metal chairs. But in prison he had finished high school, started college — "I'm learnin' to think because I'm here for not thinkin'." He finished with quiet intensity: "Don't leave here and say you didn't know."

That is the essential point of Project YAP (for Youthful Assistance Program), organized and paid for by inmates. It has brought its grim message to nearly a thousand young people, most of them visiting Fishkill for tough, profane, frightening, frequently moving rap sessions. Most, like the dozen teenagers listening to Duke and Lonnie, had already been in trouble with the law but were too young for prison. Sometimes Project YAP speakers are allowed to "go outside" to speak to young people and their parents at high schools or community organizations.

Always the aim is the same — to convince youngsters on the edge of crime and prison that there is nothing cool about crime, because it leads to prison, and prison is hell. One of the founders of the program, Melvin Defendini (known as "Blue"), a bearded white man who angrily prowled the floor in front of the listening kids like a tiger in a cage, summed it up:

Nothin' Cool

"We're the example of what you don't want to be like . . . nothing cool nothing slick."

Most of the inmate lectures, delivered in street argot that the 12 youths clearly understood, were too profane to be reported here. They told of violence, rape, loneliness, the crushing boredom, the smells and noises and despair of prison life. One black inmate, detailing his years in Clinton, Sing Sing, Auburn and Fishkill, pointedly reminded the white youths: "You white kids, y'all are the minorities in these joints."

The boys heard his words. From their blank faces, no one could tell if they were hearing anything else.

Troubles in Trading Game

WASHINGTON — The U.S. request for an urgent meeting with the Canadian government to discuss Canada-U.S. auto trade is viewed here as a harbinger of a new U.S. aggression in relations with its major trading partners.

Today a high-level delegation from the U.S. state and treasury departments is travelling to Ottawa to discuss the terms of a Canadian government incentive plan, designed to entice U.S. auto manufacturers to locate new facilities in Canada.

The Carter administration has cried foul, charging that the Canadian incentive scheme is contrary, in spirit at least, to the international objective of freer trade.

In an appearance Monday before the House banking committee, assistant treasury secretary Fred Bergsten accused the Canadians of "interventionist practices." Bergsten then announced that he and undersecretary of state Julius Katz would travel to Ottawa for "urgent consultations" with their Canadian counterparts.

Long Unhappy

Canada has been aware for some time that the Carter administration was unhappy about Canadian efforts to lure U.S. auto manufacturers north of the border with the promise of large cash grants. Bergsten's observations were, however, considered unusually strident.

The request for the immediate meeting also took the Canadian government by surprise. As a spokesman in the finance department in Ottawa said: "This arose very unexpectedly."

The specific issue that has aroused renewed American concern about Canada-U.S. auto trade is the joint federal-Ontario offer of a $75 million grant to the Ford Motor Co. to establish a new parts plant in Ontario. The plant, to cost an estimated $500 million, will provide direct employment for about 2,600 persons.

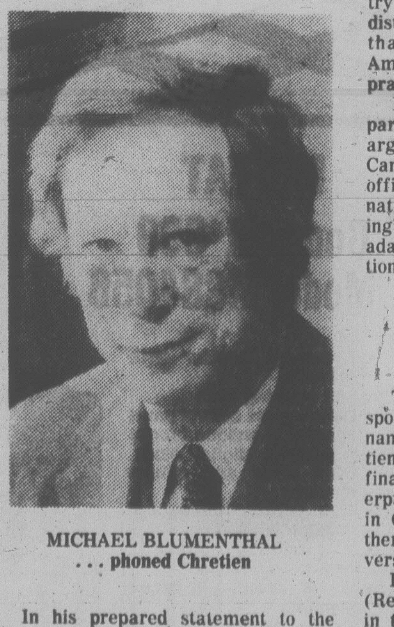
Ford has indicated that it will make an announcement of its decision on plant location within about two weeks. The only other site now actively being considered by the company is the small city of Lima in northwestern Ohio, where Ford has another plant.

Ohio Gov. Jim Rhodes, as well as local business organizations in Lima, have been heavily lobbying Ford. Treasury Secretary Michael Blumenthal has also talked to Ford executives in the past few days, apparently to persuade the company to keep its operations in the U.S. The state of Ohio has put together its own package of incentives, but the Ohio package is considerably smaller than the Canadian offer.

Though the loss of a $500 million investment wuld be significant for Ohio, the indications are that the Carter administration is more concerned about the trend than the specifics of the possible Ford move.

One administration official, who requested to remain anonymous, was asked whether he would interpret the administration move as an indication of a new get-tough stance. "Absolutely," he replied.

Though the state department attempted to downplay the significance of Bergsten's statements, treasury officials made clear that the language used by the assistant secretary had been carefully reviewed and approved at the highest level.



MICHAEL BLUMENTHAL
. . . phoned Chretien

In his prepared statement to the House banking committee, Bergsten said, in reference to the Canadian automotive incentive plan:

"We simply cannot sit by while these interventionist practices are escalated to the federal level. We have so informed the cabinet officials of the government of Canada and we have called for urgent consultations under the terms of both the U.S.-Canadian Automotive Products Agreement and the 1976 decision of the OECD council on international investment incentative and disincentives."

In making its case against Canada, the U.S. government has attempted to draw a line between incentives offered by provinces and states and those offered by a federal government. Many states, like all of the Canadian provinces, have various industrial incentive programs; Bergsten acknowledged this fact, but maintained that federal grants are somehow different.

For almost a decade, since it established the department of regional economic expansion (DREE), Ottawa has been offering cash incentives to companies willing to establish job-creating businesses in under-developed areas. The Ottawa and Quebec governments have, in fact, put together an $86 million DREE package in an attempt to persuade General Motors to build a new plant in Quebec.

The federal-provincial package being offered Ford is, however, not a DREE program, but a straight grant. Windsor, Ont., proposed site of the new Ford plant, is, in fact, one of the country's wealthiest communities. It is this distinction in the criteria for the grants that apparently has prompted the American allegations of unfair trade practices.

Neither the treasury nor state departments would, however, disclose the arguments that they will put to the Canadians at the meeting in Ottawa. An official of a House committee on international trade suggested that a "dumping" case could be made against Canada, but there was no official confirmation.

Unfair Ball Game

Treasury secretary Blumenthal has spoken by telephone to Canadian Finance Minister Jean Chretien. Chretien's office said, however, that the finance minister spoke to his U.S. counterpart from the Chretien family cottage in Quebec and that the department therefore had no knowledge of the conversation.

Representative Tennyson Guyer (Rep.), who represents the city of Lima in the U.S. congress, said Canada's offer to Ford had created "an unfair ball game." Guyer said the Canadian proposal was simply reflective of the general problem being faced by U.S. companies attempting to compete on the international market with foreign firms that receive government subsidies not available to American business.

Though Ford insisted that a final decision on the new $500 million parts plant has not yet been made, there were indications that the company is leaning in the direction of Canada. Clearly, the U.S. administration would not be seeking an urgent meeting with Canada if they did not have an indication of the company's thinking.

Proposition Six

The purpose of this letter is to acquaint your readers with an idea known as Proposition Six — designed to cut taxes, and inflation, make jobs. The three-part proposal for Canada, broader than California's Proposition 13 is:

☐ By six per cent per year for six years, reduce all taxes (property, income, gasoline, the 12 per cent federal sales tax, provincial sales tax, etc.).

☐ By six per cent per year for six years, cut spending and borrowing by federal, provincial and municipal governments. Balance the budget.

☐ By six per cent per year for six years, reduce government personnel by attrition (requires no firing of productive people, but no hiring).

If this proposition were adopted, the results in six years would be:

All taxes 31 per cent less. Government spending and borrowing reduced 31 per pent. The 12 per cent hidden federal tax down to 8¼ per cent. The five per cent sales tax down to 3½ per cent. Thus, most things would cost less. A strong dollar which will cut prices more by lowering import costs. Full employment because of more domestic buying at our lower prices and because of more exports and lower prices beat foreign competition. Inflation ended — less reason for strikes. No inflation means no pension-indexing costs.

On the other hand, if Proposition Six is ignored and inflation goes on at eight to nine per cent per year, prices will double in 8½ years, triple in four more. Huge taxes will cause mass home-selling. Layoffs, welfare and crime will greatly increase because inflation kills jobs.

If you want to end inflation, 31 per cent less taxes, plently of jobs, demand proposition Six. Write your elected officials and newspapers. Start petitions, form committees, join us in trying to get at least one major party 100 per cent committed to Proposition Six before election day. — John Thornburgh, Chairman, Help End Inflation Association, 5093 Lochside Drive.

Nitpicker?

So now we have a hassle about whether what the Queen said in French in Newfoundland meant precisely the same as it did in English. The Queen is said to have been saddened by the controversy.

Well, I am not a monarchist but I respect Queen Elizabeth as a gracious lady carrying on courageously what must be one of the most thankless jobs on earth. Surely she should have been spared being dragged into the wordy warfare being carried on by our two sets of extremists. Both sides should have their heads knocked together and be told to shut up for the rest of the visit.

And we might ask a few questions about who was the busybody who started the hassle in the first place. One of our nitpicking reporters no doubt. — A.F. Davies, 4611 Vantreight Drive.

Void to Be Filled

I wish to take issue with some of the statements made by Judge Frances Elford of the Citizenship Court as quoted in Max Low's column of July 29, One Jittery Columnist Finally Climbs Aboard. Judge Elford urges new Canadians "not to give up the heritage that is yours, your culture, your music, but to add these to the two founding cultures of Canada." Later on she states: "we've built a nation with two cultures . . ." Re national unity: "Canada was born French and English and French and English it will remain if it is to remain a country at all."

First, I am astonished that Judge Elford gives no credit whatsoever to the many cultures who have contributed so much to the building of this nation; secondly, if one is invited to retain his culture, presumably other than French and English, how can Canada remain only French and English? Is Canada not a multicultural country with two official languages and many unofficial languages? Is national unity a concern only for those of French and English background? I believe unity should be a concern for all Canadians regardless of culture or language. If Canada is to remain a country, let it be for all Canadians! To say that Canada has two founding cultures completely ignores our native Indians who were before any of us.

Based on her remarks, Judge Elford is quite correct in saying "we have not studied our history . . . and we have filled the void with myths and prejudices." — Ruth Ilnytzky, President, Inter-Cultural Association of Greater Victoria, 1560 Despard Avenue.

Got No Respect

I think it was most ungracious of you to put that picture on the front page of the July 31 Times — the one of the Queen's dress blowing in the wind. I would think you would have more respect and consideration.

Why don't you grow up? Fun is fun, but lack of respect is disgusting. — Catharine M. Speirs, Victoria.

On the Run

Three cheers for James Richardson, a man with strong convictions and great courage — not afraid to stand up and be counted. More power to him!

Individual thought and courage are characteristics the public has the right to expect from its political leaders but today many seem to be playing "follow the leader" regardless of what path he is taking.

At present Messrs. Trudeau, Levesque and Ryan (all French-Canadians from Quebec) are the key figures in discussions on the future of our whole nation. Surely this is not a natural or healthy situation, with English-Canadians being the majority group in every province except Quebec.

But where are the strong leaders among English-Canadians on the constitutional issue? They appear to be on the run, and time is running out. Oh for more leaders of the calibre and understanding of James Richardson! — F. I. Monette, Pointe Claire, Que.

'Europeans Richer and They Do Less Worrying'

DOUGLAS FISHER

Last month I spent some days driving in northwest Europe with a son who has spent several years in Europe.

My impressions of popular affairs there are conditioned by some of his experiences. Also, I was in the Canadian army in Europe in '44 and '45, and have been back, usually in Holland, Belgium and Germany, beginning in '50 and a dozen times or so since, including one six-week stretch in West Germany in 1963.

The generalizations which struck me last month are almost banal. They come out of a single-minded curiosity, first aroused in the spring of '45 when we saw the ruins of cities like Hamburg and Dusseldorf and the immense damage in port towns like Ostend and Dunkerque.

How long would it take Europe, particularly Germany, to recover absolutely from the war? When would authoritarianism and a reborn militarianism be seen again in Germany? And also tied with this, would France forgive and forget its revenge?

For all practical and most popular purposes, the war is forgotten in Western Europe. While today there is a political tone of the right and conservatism, it's no more so than in North America. Although West German efficiency in such things as phones, roads, railways, postal service, hotels and restaurants is excellent, really only matched or topped in Switzerland, there's little in the German popular media, in politics or on display in public places or gala forums to indicate any trenchant nationalism and associated militarism. Indeed, it's almost embarrassing how far ahead of Britain Germany (and, indeed, France) is in obvious things like housing, dress, food and attendance or participation at entertainment and sporting functions.

As a quick opinion it strikes me that Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Holland, Switzerland, and especially West Germany now have an edge on Canada in almost all living standards which apply to the mass of people, with the exception of our one great distinction — space of land or property. On property, however, we can't match the high level of grooming and furbishing which the Europeans give their buildings and gardens. Nor have we anything like the scale or quality of low-cost (and usually low-rental) housing in apartments and rows which the Western European countries, particularly Germany, have built.

The prices in Western Europe mirror this prosperity, at least when translated into Canadian money. The cheapest cup of coffee which I found was the equivalent of 80 cents Canadian (at Bruges in Belgium), the most expensive $2.50 (Hamburg), the usual somewhere between $1 and $1.50.

It took us over six hours to drive through excellent throughways from southern Holland to Hamburg on the Baltic in a BMW averaging just over 30 miles a gallon. The gasoline bill for this 350 to 370-mile trip was $24 Canadian. The cheapest motel room for two we found was $39. The average single room in a first-class hotel in Germany begins at about $75 and goes up to $110 a night. Only a small fraction of European hotels have TV in rooms, about half have radios.

Even with gasoline running about $2 a gallon, most of the roads we were on were very busy, and on the autobahns the average speed seems a good 10 miles an hour faster than in Canada.

Although the weather had been cool, the beach resorts along the North Sea were jammed, from the posh hotels to the simplest campgrounds.

A nice aspect of this was the high proportion of holidayers in their '60s and '70s. Hitchhikers are few in number compared with five or ten years ago. One rarely sees men or women in uniform, except police. Fewer men and women wear shorts while travelling or holidaying than do North Americans. In dress, we are the radicals. While there aren't quite so many trailers and campers as on our summer highways, there has been a marked increase from a decade ago — as there has been in the number of outboard motor boats and small sailcraft being towed. While these are almost as numerous as one sees here, there seem to be many more canoes and kayaks in summer use in Europe.

Hordes of younger West Europeans, especially Dutch and Belgians, are on bicycle vacations. One can see hundreds of them in 'shelter-halfs' along the coastal dunes, the canals and rivers.

We never found a fair-to-good restaurant that wasn't crowded at meal times. My son says he senses a steady increase in Europeans who eat out. He also feels that younger Europeans watch much less television than their Canadian counterparts. They listen to a bit less pop and rock on radio, take a more active part in team games, dance more and stay out later in groups for social pleasure than do young Canadians.

In sum, Western Europe seems very comfortable. There seem few, if any, things we in Canada have over Western Europeans except roominess. And while it may be a shallow illusion, the cumulation of my impressions over the years comes out to a Western European community which is more stable and prosperous than ours. The bulk of them also seem to fret less than we do!

Computer Technique May Spell End of Calculus

By MALCOLM BROWNE
New York Times

Calculus, one of the main mathemathical underpinnings of science for three centuries, has come under attack by a computer scientist who proposes replacing it with ordinary arithmetic in many applications.

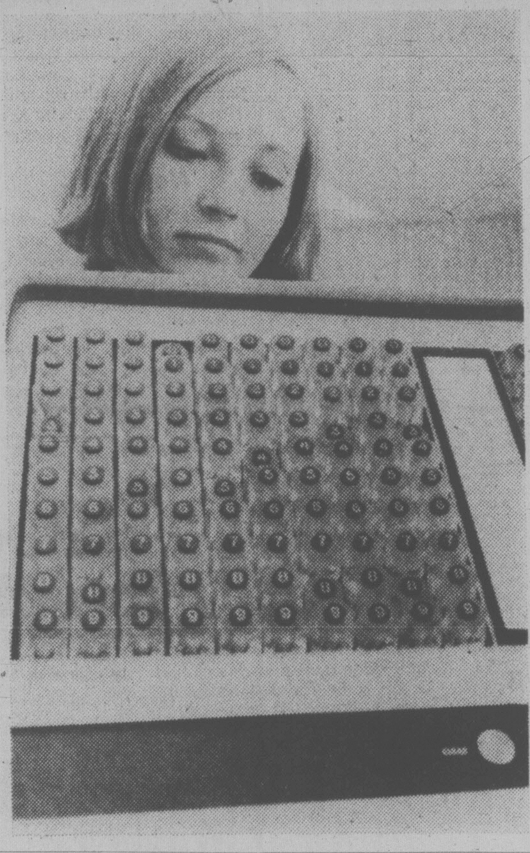
The scientist, Dr. Donald Greenspan of the University of Wisconsin, asserts that new methods based on arithmetic would work better than calculus in explaining many complicated phenomena, including the motion of electrons in atomic orbit and chemical bonding

Furthermore, he contends, difficult scientific ideas now beyond the reach of high school students who have not been taught calculus could be explained to them relatively simply.

Dr. Greenspan's unorothox approach to mathematics has prompted criticism from several prominent mathematicians and physicists who say some of his methods are naive and misleading oversimplifications.

Nevertheless, Dr. Greenspan said in an interview, he and the research team he heads are confident that their work will lead to some important scientific achievements.

Calculus is a system of mathematics devised to deal with continuous processes, such as the rates at which things change. It was invented almost simultaneously some 300 years ago by Sir Isaac Newton in England and Baron Gottfried Wilhelm von Leibniz in Germany.



A mating of classical mathematics with modern computers

Newton applied his calculus to develop concepts of acceleration on which his theory of universal gravitation and the laws of motion depend.

Whereas arithmetic must deal with discrete, or noncontinuous, information — such as a point as against a line — calculus enables its users to consider changes as a whole, such as the properties of an entire curve, not merely the properties of points along the curve.

Because of its ability to analyze whole relationships, calculus became the tool on which practically all of modern physics, including quantum mechanics and relativity theory, is based.

In recent years powerful computers have been built, but while they can do arithmetic at an incredible speed, they cannot handle calculus. Calculus deals with entire curves, not with the discrete "bits" of information — zeros and ones — that computers must use.

Dr. Greenspan and other scientists, seeking to mate classical mathematics with modern computers, have devised a way around the problem.

Basically, their system involves replacing the simple, elegant equations of calculus with a great number of ordinary arithmetic equations. No single arithmetic equation can express the relationship summed up in a calculus equation, but if enough arithmetic equations are considered together, the user may arrive at an approximation of the relationships directly expressed by calculus.

Until the large-scale computer expansion, such an approach would have been inconceivable. Alone, no mathematician, however speedy, could hope to solve the tens of thousands of arithmetic equations that might have to be substituted for a single calculus equation.

Dr. Greenspan has taken his work beyond computer technology, asserting that arithmetic may provide new and better ways of examining even the structure of atoms than are afforded by calculus, quantum mechanics and other standard tools.

He contends, for example, that his mathematical models of fluids in motion are much more accurate for representing and studying turbulence than are models based on calculus.

In general, he said, arithmetic models can be made to represent the irregularities of nature in much greater detail than that permitted by the continuities of calculus.

The finer detail of arithmetic, Dr. Greenspan asserted, allows investigators to study small-scale causes and effects in ways that are impractical when they must be lumped together statistically. The study of atomic particles, based on the broad-brush statistical treatment afforded by quantum mechanics and calculus, could be improved by new applications of arithmetic, he said.

A possible application, Dr. Greenspan said, would be in the study of the exact angles at which electrons bond atoms together in chemical compounds. If these angles could be calculated exactly by arithmetical means, chemists would obtain important insights into the nature and behavior of reactions.

The publication of Dr. Greenspan's work in various technical journals has prompted some harsh comment.

Typical was that of Dr. Stanislaw Ulam, a mathematician associated with the Department of Energy's Los Alamos Science Laboratory in New Mexico.

Dr. Ulam said in an interview that he had seen some of Dr. Greenspan's computational papers "and there's nothing revolutionary in them." Atomic physics, relativity and quantum mechanics, he said, "are a complicated business, and I don't think anything as simple-minded as Greenspan's proposals could ever explain what they have explained. It would mean having to rethink most of what we know about physics."

"We've been conditioned to using calculus for the past 300 years," Dr. Greenspan said of that criticism, "in the same way that school children are conditioned to see the multiplication tables. Well, computers don't use multiplication tables or calculus. In fact, they use completely different schemes of mathematics from the traditional ones. But they work."

Meanwhile, Dr. Greenspan, with the help of Dr. Steven Goldman, professor of science history at Lehigh University, has interested the Pennridge School District in Bucks County, Pa., in experimenting with his teaching ideas.

The district reportedly is considering teaching Dr. Greenspan's arithmetic to high school students, using a computer costing less than $20,000 as a substitute for calculus, in the teaching of advanced physics.

THE GLOBE AND MAIL

We may be closer to God in a garden, but a man with a rose in each hand cannot be presumed to be engaged upon some wholesomely innocent purpose. Stuart C. Dobson, show judge for the American Rose Society, cautions us that "it should be noted that asexual propagation of patented varieties (of rose) — that is, by budding or from cuttings — without the consent of the patent holder is contrary to law."

It is just the sort of warning that will fill some of us with guilt, or persuade us to abandon our dating service for roses in the back yard. Some gardeners will be driven underground, sneaking out at night to introduce roses to each other without the consent of their patent holder. We'll be caught rose-handed there some night, in fragrant delicto, shamefully illuminated in a police searchlight, a clear contributor to floral delinquency.

News clips:

Macy's has been taking the names of customers who pay cash for their purchases.

Citybank has been charging a 50-cent fee to customers who pay their credit-card billings promptly and fully.

"Only sleazy people pay cash!" — The owner of a limousine-hire company explaining that most of his customers use credit cards.

At 7:33 p.m. Car 73 answered a three-oh-nine at the Cyprus Hot Dog 'n' Fried Hominy Counter 'n' Carry-Out.

At 7:35 p.m. Officer O'Toole radioed for Special Unit assistance on a six-two-five. Inspector Ramirez arrived at 7:52 and attempted to interview the victims. They were incoherent.

"Divil ye minds, lads," said Inspector Ramirez. "Tis as plain as the flask on my hip who the culprit is."

Officer O'Toole was baffled as usual. "But Monsieur the Inspector," he murmured, "as for me — well — sacre bleu, but I do not see of the clues a single one, in despite of the three hotdog and fried-hominy counter clerks of whom the state of mind is of the shock deep up to the incoherence."

Uttering his characteristic sardonic chuckle, Inspector Ramirez pointed to a small pile of paper and metal. "Faith and begorrah," he said.

Officer O'Toole was astonished, for he had never seen either faith or begorrah before and would never have guessed that they were a combination of paper and metal. "To put it most plainly, in fact," he said, "one would have assumed that this pile small of the paper and the metal was, in a word, the trash."

Officer O'Toole blanched.

"Do ye know then, O'Toole, what it is that you're seeing with your eyes?"

"Is it that it is possible that I am seeing the work of--?"

"Of Jack the Casher," said Inspector Ramirez.

Yes, Jack the Casher had struck again. Washington was notified. Banks alerted. Department stores cautioned. The details of his latest depredation were easily reconstructed. A sleazy-looking man had entered at 7:10 p.m., ordered and eaten a hot dog and fried hominy, then produced cash. The familiar brutal commands had followed. "Anybody who tries to tail me gets a five-dollar bill right in the face." No one was in condition to follow him, of course. Not after looking right into cold cash.

Banks were notified by satellite, electronic miracles, computers and Mailgram. It had become standard procedure after each of The Casher's strikes.

In the past, his pattern had always been the same. First, he would become sleazy. Why he became sleazy was a mystery. Some thought it had to do with the cycle of the moon. Then he would walk into a reputable place of business, order merchandise and produce cash.

In the only two instances in which anyone had remained sensible long enough to demand his name, he had replied the first time, "Kaiser Wilhelm the Second," and the second time, "Nellie Melba."

After each strike, the authorities knew, he would use money orders to pay all his bills in full before they became overdue. Thus, the news that he had struck again invariably depressed the financial market, which feared that he intended to destroy the world banking system.

On this night, The Casher, happily listening to hot dogs and fried hominy gurgling in his digestive tract, headed down the shadowy street toward home, thinking of all the bills that he would pay on time this very night. Suddenly, two muggers stepped out of the shadows and pinned him to the pavement.

"What do you want?" he gasped.

"Sixty bucks," said the presiding mugger. "And we want it on American Express, Master Charge or Bank Americard."

"Got no credit cards," gasped Jack, "but there's two hundred in cash in my wallet."

Both muggers recoiled. "He's sleazy," said one. "I'm not gonna touch him."

"You ought to be ashamed of yourself," the second told The Casher, "going out on the street among decent, respectable, debt-ridden deadbeats."

They would have beaten him severely but did not want to get sleaze all over their knuckles. The Casher was so upset that he forgot to pay his bills on time that night and as a result his real name, which was Diddlesby, turned up in credit-rating bureaus across the country as a bad risk.

Soon he began receiving credit cards in barrel lots.

Jack the Casher hasn't struck since, although a certain deadbeat in midtown Manhattan has swindled every limousine-hire company in town for months of elegant transport, which only makes them compete even harder to serve him.

As one operator puts it, "He's real carriage trade."

Toronto

TORONTO (CP) — Rising energy issues sent the Toronto stock market moderately higher today in active mid-session trading.

A trading halt was issued about 1 p.m. in shares of D'Eldona Gold Mines Ltd. pending a statement from the company. In earlier trading, the stock dropped 17 cents to $1.23 a share on the sale of 207,000 shares.

Trading halts continued in shares of Universal Gas Co. Ltd. and Monarch Life Assurance Co.

Aquitaine Co. of Canada Ltd. has announced it will offer $12 a share for all outstanding shares of Universal Gas, which closed Thursday at $10½ a share.

Monarch Life, last at $34½ a share, was halted about 11 a.m. EDT for the second time in three days. Tuesday's halt was issued for dissemination of news that United Canadian Shares Ltd. planned a $55-a-share offer for a minimum of 80 per cent of the company's 520,000 shares.

Among other industrials, Falconbridge Nickel Mines A jumped 2¼ to $29, Canadian Tire 1¼ to $26¾, Crown Trust 1 to $43, Dalmys A 1 to $8½ and B.C. Packers B 1 to $59.

New York

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market rose in active trading today, but neither its rise nor its volume matched the levels achieved earlier this week.

Analysts said the market seemed unaffected by two pieces of less-than-good economic news: Thursday's report by the Federal Reserve Board that the country's basic money supply had risen by $2.7 billion in the latest reporting week; and a labor department announcement that June unemployment had risen to 6.2 per cent from May's 5.7 per cent.

Montreal

MONTREAL (CP) — Prices were generally higher in moderate tradingtoday on the Montreal Stock Exchange.

Price Ltd. advanced ⅛ to $15⅛, Imperial Oil A ⅜ to $21⅛, Trans-Canada Pipe-Lines ⅛ to $17⅜, Alcan ⅜ to $36¼, Labatt A ¼ to $22, Bank of Montreal ¼ to $23¼, Zeller's A ¼ to $10¼ and B.C. Telephone ¼ to $17. Dofasco A dipped ⅛ to $28⅞, CP Ltd. ⅛ to $21¼, Montreal Trust ⅛ to $18 and Brascan A ⅛ to $16¼.

Among speculative issues, Aldona Mines slid two cents to $1.01 on a turnover of 5,500 shares.

London

LONDON (CP) — The London stock market was moderately lower today near the close of light trading.

The Financial Times index closed at 487.2, up 2.7.

Fish Market Loses Ground

VANCOUVER (CP) — After one year of operation the Gastown fishermen's market on the city's waterfront appears to have been abandoned by both merchants and customers.

The city's first outdoor market has become one of the quietest spots in Vancouver in the early morning, a time when other fish markets around the world are crowded with fishmongers and truck farmers hawking their wares.

The market opened in July, 1977 with a $400,000 federal government grant and was busy last summer. But this year merchants say business has been bad.

Customers complain the market is difficult to find because there are few signs indicating it exists. Pedestrians must cross three train tracks to reach the market, then carry their produce over two blocks to reach the nearest bus stop. The market does not advertise.

Others complain it is not as clean as it should be, and lacks restaurants and boutiques to attract those not necessarily interested in purchasing fish or produce.

The market will face competition next year with the planned opening of a second market in the city's Granville Island redevelopment project. Russell Brink of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, which is developing Granville Island, said there are already merchants lined up for it.

Crown Mail Supported

Having a Crown corporation assume responsibility for Canadian postal service will decrease dramatically the probability of labor-management confrontation in the post office, a B.C. union official said today.

John Fryer, general secretary of the B.C. Government Employees Union, said it is just unfortunate the move was not made earlier.

Prime Minister Trudeau said Tuesday that he was "fed up" with the post office and that it would be turned into a Crown corporation rather than run as a federal department.

Fryer said it is "absolutely incredible" that the workers in the post office, represented by the Canadian Union of Postal Workers (CUPW) had to mount the kind of campaign they did in order to have a Crown corporation established.

"We believe such a move in this instance is absolutely necessary and management of the postal service by a Crown corporation will allow CUPW to negotiate more effectively with the employer."

SUNSET CEREMONY BY CADETS

Cadets of the Vernon Army Cadet Camp will stage a tattoo and Sunset Ceremony in front of the Legislative Buildings on Saturday and Sunday at 7:30 p.m. with a cadet in command for the first time in Victoria.

Leading the parade will be cadet Drum Major John Bennett of Coquitlam. The 100-strong guard will be commended by Deny Alexander of Burnaby.

The guard will be led by a 50-cadet band of pipes and drums and military brass. The cadets in the band and guard represent the four western provinces, the Northwest Territories and the Yukon.

Difficult September Looms for Saanich

Although the usual summer slump and holiday absences have slowed the tempo of civic business in Saanich, signs are that September will be an unusually busy — and difficult — month at the municipal hall.

The schedule of meetings will probably include at least two major public hearings on controversial development proposals, while regular council business will include resumed debate on two contentious issues involving proposed changes in the municipality's election policies.

One public hearing already slated for Sept. 14 will deal with the rezoning of land on Interurban Road, where council is considering the creation of an industrial park.

(A study assessing the impact of the development on the environment, traffic and other factors is now being prepared by the municipal planning department, and is due to be submitted to council Aug. 24).

Another hearing likely to be called on a different date next month concerns the proposal by Broadmead Farms Ltd. to build a large mixed-housing development — including apartments — on 70-acre Minnie Mountain in the Ten Mile Point area.

The Cadboro Bay Residents Association has organized strong opposition to the proposal and is lobbying council to keep the area's traditional single-family character intact.

Council will decide on Tuesday whether to send the Broadmead application for a land-use contract to the public hearing stage. Its Advisory Planning Commission has recommended approval.

In other September business, council will be asked to approve proposals to impose spending limits on municipal election candidates, and to follow Victoria's example in holding elections every two years.

Nanaimo Port Talks Continuing

NANAIMO (CP) — Federal Transport Minister Otto Lang said Thursday that discussions concerning the funding of the planned Duke Point and Jack Point harbor facility and industrial facility are continuing.

"I am trying to put myself in the position where I can go to the treasury board to obtain the funds," Lang told the city's chamber of commerce, "but going to the board is even a more hazardous occupation than ever before."

The project will be funded by the federal and provincial governments as well as the Nanaimo Harbor Commission.

The commission said earlier it would contribute $7.5 million to the development.

Stupich Jabs at Quarterly Report

Former finance minister Dave Stupich (NDP—Nanaimo) said Thursday there is little in the Social Credit government's first quarterly financial report for the current fiscal year to excite "the weary taxpayer or this province's unemployed."

The report, for the three-month period ended June 30, shows B.C. had a budgetary surplus of $231.9 million — up from the $197.3 million forecast in the budget presented April 8.

Revenues for the period were $1.1 billion — $11.8 million more than forecast, and spending $862.4 million, or $23.8 million less than forecast.

Stupich, the NDP's finance critic, said the report contains "some interesting items which should be pointed out."

He said the NDP had opposed the 40 per cent increase in sales tax imposed by the Social Credit government in its first year in office because it "would remove many needed consumer dollars from the B.C. economy."

"Finally the government listened to us and reduced the sales tax back down to five per cent at the beginning of this fiscal year. This has resulted in a 14.2 per cent increase in consumer sales activity in the province which is welcome news indeed."

Stupich said Finance Minister Evan Wolfe had indicated he was pleased with the 18.9 per cent increase in hotel and motel tax revenue compared with the same period last year — an increase of $400,000.

"I would be happy about it too, if I did not also note that (Travel Industry Minister) Grace McCarthy has increased her expenditures by some $5.8 million, or 30 per cent, in the same period," he said in a news release.

"This does not seem to be a very efficient way to stimulate the tourist industry in B.C."

Stupich said the money should be allocated directly to tourist-related businesses through incentive loans "rather than being doled out to them in the form of Smile buttons and Captain Cook posters."

He said the Housing Corporation of B.C., which the government is attempting to sell, had net earnings of $1.56 million for the six months ended April 30.

"Likewise Panco Poultry, which is also on the list to be disposed of, had net earnings of $313,000 in the first three months of this fiscal year," Stupich said.

"It is difficult to understand why the Social Credit government continues to pursue a policy of disposing of viable and valuable assets which are owned by all the people of the province."

Vancouver Parks Board Given Grant

The B.C. government will provide a grant of $188,973 to the City of Vancouver Board of Parks and Recreation to cover its share of the cost of the Riley Park Recreation complex extension in Vancouver, Recreation Minister Sam Bawlf said Thursday.

The minister also announced a grant of $6,100 to the village of Lytton for construction of new change rooms for the Lytton swimming pool.

Sidney Sailor Success Gathering Survey Data

A Sidney yachtsman working as a private contractor is proving the value of the federal government's make-or-buy science policy in gathering hydrographic data along the Pacific coast.

Ralph Wills, regional field hydrographer for the Canadian Hydrographic Service, Institute of Ocean Sciences, said this is the third season of contracting out surveys. Information collected is used to update and correct marine navigational charts, relieving the service of this task and allowing its efforts to be concentrated on original surveys.

Work done by hydrographer I.J. Campbell of Sidney, using his private yacht, has worked well, Wills said. Campbell has just been awarded a $16,486 contract to continue the task of supplying CHS with up-to-date details for charts and sailing directions published for mariners by the service.

As a former member of CHS, Campbell is familiar with the responsibility for accuracy and marine safety.

The task mainly concerns artificial surface features such as new wharves, moorages, booming grounds and other shore installations which are continually changing, relocated or demolished.

But natural physical features also change, particularly below surface, as sand and gravel bars move, bottom charactertistics vary and dredging is carried out.

Surveys include the use of common instrumentation for taking bearings, distances, compass directions and depth soundings but nothing comparable to the electronic gear used by hydrographic service vessels.

Aids to navigation, buoys and markers are checked to ensure they are adequate and correctly positioned, and recommendations for additional aids are made.

Mariners provide the hydrographic service with many suggestions and notifications of incorrect or incomplete information, and these are forwarded to Campbell to be checked before changes are incorporated in charts and sailing directions.

VICTORIA PARKING COMMISSION

BEFORE THE JUDGE

A preliminary hearing into a charge of attempted murder was scheduled in Victoria provincial court Thursday for Dec. 20 and 21.

Anthony David Lowe, 24, of 273 Burnside West, is facing the charge in connection with a July 8 stabbing incident in James Bay involving Sharon Ann Trahon.

Lowe is defended by lawyer Barry Mah Ming.

Crown counsel Nicholas Lang told Judge Blake Allan that the preliminary is expected to take two days.

A 26-year-old who told police he had a drug problem and was taking two-to-three caps of heroin a day has been remanded so that Lang can ascertain if any treatment facility under the newly-enacted heroin treatment program is available.

Stephen Prescott, 991 Cloverdale, pleaded guilty to a July 11 break-in at Island Drywall, 559 Hillside.

Lang told the court Prescott gained entry through a broken window in a rear door and took a photocopying machine, an adding machine, a typewriter, a cheque-writing machine, two construction staple guns, two drills and a saw with a total value of approximately $1,800. Lang said everything but the drills and saw, which were pawned, had been recovered.

He said Prescott went to Victoria city police Wednesday and told officers he felt guilty and wanted to confess to the break-in. He led investigating officers to a wooded area where most of the stolen items were recovered.

Lang, answering a question from Allan, said the heroin treatment act had been proclaimed but could not tell the judge whether any treatment facility was available now.

Allan ordered a pre-sentence report and remanded Prescott until Aug. 8 for sentencing.

One of two 18-year-old girls was denied bail and both were remanded until next Friday for election of trial method and fixing of a date for preliminary hearing.

Christine Laurel Foster and Cheryl Smith were jointly charged with the theft of a 1978 Honda Civic valued at $5,215 from Metro Honda, 2151 Blanshard, Wednesday and possession of stolen property.

Miss Foster was denied bail while Miss Smith was released on her own recognizance in the sum of $500.

A 19-year-old convicted of his second drinking-driving offence in just over a year was given a 14-day jail term.

Murray Wayne Farup of Ganges pleaded guilty to impaired driving in Sidney on July 15.

Lang told the court Sidney RCMP clocked Farup's vehicle at 110 kilometres in a 70-kilometres-an-hour zone shortly after 6 p.m. and had to pursue him for nearly half a mile before he was stopped. Breath sample readings of .15 and .13 were obtained.

Lang also said that Farup was convicted of impaired driving July 18, 1977, and was fined $500 on that occasion.

Fined for drinking-driving were: Salvador Raposo, 30, of 718 Wilson, $700; Isabel Emily O'Brien, 52, of 2949 Glen Lake Road, $500; Gary David Staniforth, 43, of 3065 Balfour, $450; and Edward Charles Gardner, 23, of the Crown and Anchor Motel, $300.

In addition, Gardner was fined $50 for not having a valid driver's licence and was ordered to perform 100 hours of community service work.

Elliott Given 9-Year Term

VANCOUVER (CP) — A provincial court judge sentenced former fugitive Russell Elliott, 26, to nine years in prison Thursday on charges of drug trafficking, escaping lawful custody and possession of a restricted weapon.

Judge K. A. Smith said in sentencing that he recognized Elliott was a heavy user of heroin and cocaine during the time many of the offences were committed.

Elliott had escaped custody July 8, 1977, while on a visit to Vancouver General Hospital and was captured by police outside a city dwelling last Sept. 9.

His lawyer, Patricia Colleen Connor, was acquitted in county court on Monday of harboring a prison escaper and possessing a stolen pistol. Court was told that Miss Connor, 27, was sitting in a car parked outside the dwelling where Elliott was caught.

He was shot by police when he refused a warning to stop as he left the house.

Judge Smith sentenced Elliott to concurrent terms of six years each for possession of heroin for the purpose of trafficking in March, 1976, and trafficking in cocaine in December, 1976.

He also sentenced Elliott to a consecutive one year jail term for escaping lawful custody. He noted the accused had used a knife in the escape.

Elliott was sentenced to a consecutive two-year term for possession of a restricted semi-automatic pistol when he was captured.

CUPE Merger

The Saanich and Oak Bay locals of the Canadian Union of Public Employees have merged.

Tom Smith, the union's regional representative, said the move was made for reasons of efficiency as well as to cut costs.

At the end of December, 1977, Oak Bay Local 511, had 91 members and Saanich, Local 374, had 447. Smith said the membership is likely up about 10 per cent now bringing the combined Local 374's membership to about 600.

Saanich Youth Fined On Two Drug Counts

A 19-year-old Saanich youth was fined $300 in county court Thursday and put on probation for one year after pleading guilty to two drug offences.

Kathryn Diane Nicholson was stopped by police Jan. 11 and five grams of marijuana were found in her handbag. A later search of her home disclosed one gram of MDA.

The prosecution entered a stay of proceedings on a third charge — possession of methamphetamine for the purpose of trafficking.

Judge Richard Low said in view of her age and the amount of drugs involved, the appropriate disposition was a fine and probation.

She was fined $100 for the marijuana offence, in default 10 days in jail, and $200 for the MDA offence, in default 20 days consecutive. The fines are payable at $50 a month.

In another case, Clifford Glenn Anderson, 25, pleaded guilty to breaking and entering Stadacona Centre on Pandora Avenue with intent to commit an indictable offence Jan. 29. A pre-sentence report was ordered and he will be sentenced Oct. 10.

20 People, $1M Cut By Forest Council

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Council of Forest Industries (COFI) has cut 20 people and $1 million from its 1978 budget following an internal review of spending.

The review, initiated by MacMillan Bloedel Ltd., which last year halved its $1.2 million financial support of the council, reduces COFI's budget to $4.8 million.

"It is no secret that MacMillan Bloedel prompted the review," a COFI spokesman said. "But the review and the steps we have taken have the unanimous support of all the companies in the council."

The council currently employs 135 people.

Log Hauling Halt

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — Independent truck loggers, who stopped hauling loads Friday in a dispute with Northwood Pulp and Timber Ltd., have agreed to meet with company officials and contractors logging for the company.

About 70 owner-operators parked their trucks to protest poor conditions on Bowron Road, about 65 kilometres east of here, and a rate schedule which they said causes them to drive faster to make more money.

They want a raise in pay, the right to negotiate directly with the company rather than through contractors, and better forest road maintenance.

New CBC Stations

OTTAWA (CP) — The Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission Thursday gave the go-ahead for two CBC English-language radio stations in B.C.

The commission approved licences for FM stations at Masset and Prince George.

Mother Remanded

MAPLE RIDGE (CP) — Wendy Carol McGregor, 27, of Maple Ridge was remanded for 30 days for psychiatric examination when she appeared in court Thursday on a charge of second-degree murder.

The charge was laid after her son Daniel, 3, died Wednesday in Vancouver General Hospital. Police did not release details of the child's death.

Judge Appointed

Kim Husband of New Westminster has been appointed a judge of the provincial court, Attorney-General Garde Gardom said Thursday.

Gardom said Husband, whose appointment becomes effective Sept. 1, has practised law for the past 12 years with the firm of Eirikson, Husband, Chipperfield and Gould.

Libel Suit Filed

VANCOUVER (CP) — Two B.C. Trades Council officials and the business manager of the operating engineers' union filed suit Thursday for libel against Frank Stevens, business manager of Cement Workers' Union.

James Kinnaird, president of the B.C.-Yukon Territory Building Construction Trades Council; Roy Gauthier, secretary-treasurer of the same council and Michael Parr, business manager at International Union of Operating Engineers, Local 115, allege libel in Vancouver Sun stories July 7, 11 and 22, 1978.

The stories deal with statements Stevens made in connection with construction union wage negotiations.

Unions Ordered To Merge

VANCOUVER (CP) — The British Columbia Labor Relations Board has ordered fish handler and meatcutters at B.C. Ice and Cold Storage Ltd., members of separate trade unions for more than 20 years, into one union.

The United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union (UFAWU) with 40 members, will absorb the three members of the meatcutters local of the Canadian Food and Allied Workers (CFAW).

The company, located in the Vancouver Dockyards, feared that if the three meatcutters went on strike their picket line could shut down the whole operation.

A panel, headed by board vice-chairman Ben van der Woerd, granted the employer's application for a consolidation of the two bargaining units because "the present arrangements do not lend themselves to stability."

IMMIGRATION BOOT TO 12 HOOKERS

VANCOUVER (CP) — Twelve foreign prostitutes, enticed to Vancouver by the freedom to solicit customers openly, have been deported since June 1, an immigration officers said Thursday.

About 12 others were persuaded to leave the country voluntarily in the past two months, said Russ Bleackley, supervising enforcement officer at the Vancouver immigration centre.

All but one of them were Americans from West Coast states, he said. The exception was a Norwegian woman.

Bleackley said deportation orders were issued by immigration inquiry adjudicators after the 12 were found to be in Canada illegally, because they came into the country under false pretences, carried forged identification papers or had stayed beyond the time limit.

Milfoil Worry in Wash.

PENTICTON (CP) — Eurasian milfoil weed has been found in 15 lakes in Washington State, eight more than last year, a representative of a United States committee on milfoil said Wednesday.

The committee is visiting the British Columbia Interior to study how the province has tried to combat the weed, which has infested about 2,000 acres in six Okanagan Lakes.

Study manager M. J. Griffiths said most of the new weed deposits were found in the Columbia River reservoirs in eastern Washington.

There has been no plan to fight the weed in Washington and only token attacks have been made, he said.

OPTIMISM PREVAILS AS GAMES OPEN IN EDMONTON

Canadians Confident of Gold Strike

EDMONTON (CP) — When the curtain rang down on the Montreal Olympics two years ago, Canadians were disappointed, but not surprised, that the host country was denied a gold medal.

But with the official opening ceremonies out of the way and the first five golds of the XIth Commonwealth Games due to be distributed tonight, Canadians rank as favorites to win two and are given a good chance for a third.

Canada has the fastest time in the Commonwealth this year in the 4x100-metre freestyle relay, the first event to be decided in the Commonwealth Games pool and 15-year-old Carol Klimpel of Toronto is favored in the women's 100 freestyle.

Canadian swimming coach Don Talbot, who has set a team target of half the gold medals available, is sending Gary Macdonald of Mission City, B.C., Peter Szmidt of Montreal, Bill Sawchuk of Thunder Bay, Ont., and Graham Smith of Edmonton after the relay gold.

Predictions are less clear-cut on the outcome of the 1,000-metre time trial, the first event on the cycling program.

Canada has never won the event in nine previous tries but Jocelyn Lovell, the Toronto veteran who was third eight years ago at Edinburgh, is rated a serious contender along with Trevor Gadd of England and 21-year-old David Weller of Jamaica.

Also confident of winning a medal is Gord Singleton, another 21-year-old from Niagara Falls, Ont., but his team manager, Erick Oland, says his chances better in the sprint event, which begins Saturday and reaches its final stage Monday night.

There are no Canadians entered in the remaining two events to be decided today, flyweight and bantamweight weightlifting. Precious McKenzie, competing for New Zealand after winning gold medals for England at the last three Games, is the sentimental favorite in the flyweight class.

Canada's women's diving team, which swept the medals in the springboard event in Christchurch, New Zealand, four years ago, is expected to dominate the field again when the preliminary rounds are completed tonight.

The team is anchored by 26-year-old Beverley Boys of Pickering, Ont., who has amassed an awesome total of six medals in three previous Games, three of them gold.

Edmonton's formidable Smith family are involved in the heats of two individual medley swimming events as Graham starts as favorite in the men's 400 metres individual medley and his sister Becky enjoys similar status in the women's 200.

The three-day team badminton competition, a new Games event, opens today with England and Malaysia considered the likely finalists and Canada expected to battle India, New Zealand and Scotland for the bronze medal.

The boxers begin seven days of competition with first-round bouts tonight.

The Canadian track team lost its only contender in the women's 100-metre hurdles when 19-year-old Joanne McLeod, who finished sixth in the event in the 1977 World Cup, pulled a leg muscle in training and had to withdraw.

It was the second casualty in three days for the women's track team. On Tuesday Jane Haist of Montreal, defending Games champion in the discus and shot put, announced her withdrawal because of a disc problem.

Nancy Garapick Back For New Swim Start

EDMONTON — She was a blithe bubble of a girl then, a 13-year-old who was told she could beat the world and almost did. But that was three years ago, and now Nancy Garapick is here as an also-ran.

Nancy Garapick, the Halifax wunderkind, the laughing little blonde who'd gone from club meets to the world championships in three giant steps: road trip to a swim meet in Quebec, then an invitation to a youth meet in Berlin, then the Canadian trials. And suddenly, in a matter of a few months from the day at home in Halifax when the prospect of the trip to Quebec had her shaky with anticipation, she was standing on the starting pad in Cali, Columbia, swimming against the world's best.

She was a backstroker who could float like a thistle on the water. In practice the East German girls would come to watch her, this little kid from nowhere who was moving into waters supposedly theirs alone.

At the start of the 100-metre backstroke she was almost lost, a mini-sub between destroyers - East Germany's Ulrike Richter and Brigitte Tauber. And she blew the turn and finished third.

Between races I found her on the pool deck reading Jacquelyn Suzanne's racy novel, 'Once Is Not Enough.' And she giggled and said the title got her, and she was reading it to remind herself that the 200 was ahead there was work to be done.

In the 200 she finished second and cried a little because finally she understood about pressure, about who she was and where she was and what was expected of her. And her coach, Nigel Kemp, shouldered his way through the mob around her and said, "Hello, sunshine. You did just fine," and it was one of the beautiful moments.

She was, remember, short months out of the club pool in Halifax. The Olympics were coming, and she was only 13. People were telling her that she was Canada's big hope — maybe its only hope.

I listened to a couple of Canadian officials, cold-bloodedly assessing her chances, wondering if the strength she was gaining would compensate for the curves she was developing. And I remember thinking she looked awfully tiny to be carrying a country on her back.

But she went to Montreal and slipped only a little, finishing third in both backstrokes. Two bronze medals at 14, and the potential barely scratched.

Now she's 16, and here at the Commonwealth Games she isn't swimming the backstroke, she's swimming the 200 individual medley and the 200 freestyle, because they're the only events for which she qualified at the Canadian trials.

They are saying here that she has been overworked, that she entered too many events in the Canadians — both freestyles, both butterflies, both medleys and the 200 backstroke. She finished third in each, and people say she's burned out.

Kemp discusses it with the wariness of a man asked the same questions too often by too many people. He has always looked after Nancy, moving her career along at a calculated pace, shielding her from as much of the spotlight as possible in the meteoric ascent to Cali, making sure people remembered she was a little girl first and a swimmer second. Now there are differences of opinion at the coaching and executive level of her post-Olympic schedule. "Nigel," one observer says candidly, "is under a lot of heat."

If he is, it doesn't show.

"We started her swimming the IM because she needed a challenge," Kemp said. "It gave her some variety. Maybe we did let the backstroke drift a little because we were concentrating on the other strokes.

"But we aren't giving up on the backstroke. Don't quit on her. Wait until next year, then we'll see."

Meanwhile, Nancy Garapick is here as an outside threat in two events for which she is not particularly known, and at the world's she'll be another kid barely worth a spot in the morning betting line.

There are those who say she may well become one of the world's better IM competitors. She is enormously strong and does all the strokes well. This could be an interlude, a pause before the next spurt puts her on top again in a different event and people forget that she once almost ruled the backstroke.

Maybe they're right. Perhaps not — and if not, maybe it's just as well. Because she's had all the best of it — the trips around the world, the climb to the podium, the cheers of the thousands. And she had them young enough so that if she has to walk away she still has time to enjoy the other wonders of her age, the joys of being a normal teenager with a normal existance.

Call Them The 'Molson Canadiens'

MONTREAL (CP) — The battle of the breweries for control of one of North America's premier sports franchises—Montreal Canadiens of the National Hockey League—appeared ended today.

Molson Breweries of Canada Ltd., had a news conference scheduled for noon, at which time it was expected to announce it had purchased 90 per cent of the 19-time Stanley Cup winning club from current owners — Edward and Peter Bronfman — for upwards of the $23 million offer made earier this week by Labatt Breweries.

At the same time, the brewery was reported ready to lease the 16,544-seat Montreal Forum for an indefinite period. The air-conditioned Forum is in almost constant use with various other attractions on a year-long basis.

It was learned that under the new corporate structure, Jean Beliveau, long-time star with the hockey club and now vice-president of corporate relations with the team, will be made president. He will replace lawyer Jacques Courtois as president and NHL governor for the club.

In addition to his duties with the Canadiens, Beliveau is a director of the Molson Companies Ltd., the parent company of the brewery.

Throughout the negotiations, the Bronfman brothers kept a completely low profile and refused comment.

When the Labatt interest became public knowledge, Molson Breweries president Morgan McCammon, admitted his company was also interested in the purchase of the team.

In London, Ont., Peter Widdrington, president and chief executive officer of John Labatt Ltd., said today Labatt's made a "very serious attempt" to purchase the Canadiens

He said the offer was a "very good one" for 100 per cent of the franchise. He said Molson's bid "had to be even better."

Mussels Lose Leading Hitter

BELLINGHAM — Victoria Mussels lost more than the Northwest League baseball game here Thursday.

Dan Gans, who was leading the team with five home runs and 27 runs-batted-in, suffered a severed Achilles tendon during Victoria's 4-1 loss to Bellingham Mariners and will probably be out of action for the rest of the season.

Gans, who was playing first base, was spiked by baserunner Chuck Lindsay during the fourth inning.

Victoria committed four errors and only one of the four runs given up by Mussels' pitcher Frank Lucarelli was earned.

Al Alpaugh and Steve Kasunic each had two hits and a stolen base for Victoria.

Winning-pitcher Rick Naumann scattered seven hits and the win was preserved by the no-hit pitching of reliever Gary Fiorante in the final three innings.

Elsewhere, Walla Walla Padres are still in first place in the tight Northern Division race on the strength of three home runs. Randy Putman, Mobil Cox and Mike Parker each contributed a homer to keep Padres on top with a 6-5 victory over second-place Grays Harbor Loggers.

In the Southern Division it was a free-for all at Boise, where Bend Timberhawks pounded five Boise pitchers for 24 hits to rack up a 21-9 decision over the Buckskins and Salem Senators beat Eugene Emeralds 7-2 — the third straight for the Senators over the division leaders.

Caps Pad Streak

VANCOUVER (CP) — Vancouver Whitecaps scored three goals in the first 22 minutes and went on to defeat San Jose Earthquakes 6-0 Thursday night in a one-sided North American Soccer League game before a crowd of 24,216. Kevin Hector scored three goals and Bobby Lenarduzzi added two for the Whitecaps which won their 23rd game in 29 starts and their 12th in a row. The other Vancouver goal came when a San Jose defender knocked a Hector cross into his own net. In the only other league match, San Diego defeated Tornado, 2-0.

Bellies Topple Adanacs

NEW WESTMINSTER — A radical switch in style paid dividends Thursday night as New Westminster Salmonbellies romped to a 17-10 win over Coquitlam Adanacs in the opening game of a best-of-seven Western Lacrosse Association semi-final series at Queen's Park Arena.

Salmonbellies, the least penalized and possibly least aggressive team in the league during the regular season, stopped playing "Mr. Nice Guy" and opted for a hard-hitting style in the playoffs.

Salmonbellies lost five of their six regular-season games against the fleet-footed Adanacs using meeker tactics.

Al Lewthwaite, six-foot-four and 235 pounds, led the way as Salmonbellies handed out some of their hardest checks of the season and were instigators in a pair of fisticuff outbreaks that were definitely uncharacteristic of the New Westminster club.

Brian Tasker scored three goals and added six assists to lead the New Westminster attack.

Wayne Goss and Norm Leuszler each added three goals. Bill Mosdell added two while singles came from Bob Tasker, John Hannah, Eric Cowleson, Ivan Tuura, Mario Govorchin and Ray Bennie.

Dave Durante notched three goals for Coquitlam and Mark Valastin added two more. Ray Mattinson, Frank Neilson, Mike Reelie and Randy Bryan rounded out the Adanacs' scoring.

Coquitlam jumped to a 4-1 first period lead, but New Westminster stormed back in the second to lead 9-6.

Ted Gernaey stopped 37 shots in net for the winners while John Lewis blocked 36 for Coquitlam.

BURNABY'S FAST START STOPS MACS IN OPENER

BURNABY — Victoria McDonalds retained some old habits right into the playoffs, falling behind in the early going before dropping a 17-7 decison to Burnaby Cablevision in the opening game of a best-of-seven Western Canada Junior Lacrosse League semi-final series here Thursday.

Burnaby, which ran away with the regular-season title, exploded for eight unanswered goals in the first period and then pushed in five more in the second period to put things out of reach with a 13-3 lead.

Dan Perreault led the Cable assault with four goals. Mike O'Reilly and Derek Dickson each scored three, John Swan counted two and singles were notched by Gord Roberts, Paulo Bruno, Lloyd Symons, Ken Sim and Gavin Clark.

Wayne Reeve and Tarey Pollock each scored twice for the McDonalds, who were outshot, 41-34. Mark Roberts, Doug Angrove and Murray McLaren completed scoring for the Bakers.

The second game of the series is scheduled Tuesday at Esquimalt Sports Centre.

Bad Day for Nicklaus But Not for Watson

OAKMONT, Pa. (AP) — Jack Nicklaus and Mother Nature, maybe the two most potent forces in golf, both accommodated Tom Watson as he took the first-round lead in the annual Professional Golfers' Association championship.

Nicklaus did his part Monday by hooking his opening tee shot into a ditch and staying in a rut the rest of the day to finish with an eight-over-par 79.

"It was not my day, and this is the kind of golf course where you can shoot a bad round," said the winner of more major tournaments than anybody in the history of golf.

"The course is very difficult, but I think the rain will make it easier this afternoon," added Nicklaus, who was playing No. 16 when thundershowers brought the first of two rain delays.

The water did soften Oakmont Country Club's previously hard, bouncy greens, making them more vulnerable to accurate irons like the ones wielded by Watson.

"Obviously, the rain affected the whole golf course," Watson said after he managed a four-under-par 67, which put him 12 strokes ahead of Nicklaus and one ahead of runnerup Dave Stockton at 68.

"We could throw the balls right at the greens," added Watson, who also sank birdie putts of 30 and 35 feet.

Yet Nicklaus, who three-putted a green just after the first rain delay, wasn't giving up.

Tied for third at 69, only two shots out, were Lee Treyino, Dave Hill, Ben Crensaw and Johnny Miller.

Lakehill Stays Alive

NORTH VANCOUVER — Jamie Porpaczy bashed out a 300-foot grand-slam homer and Mike House pitched a two-hitter Thursday night to power Lakehill of Victoria to a 14-2 decision over Killarney of Vancouver in British Columbia Little League championship play.

The win kept Victoria alive in the losers' bracket of the double-loss elimination affair.

Porpaczy's blast, the longest of the tourney, keyed a seven-run second inning.

House struck out 10 batters while going the distance.

Lakehill now faces Trail in another losers' bracket game at 6:30 p.m. Saturday. Little Mountain of Vancouver takes on Whalley tonight and the winner will meet the winner of the Lakehill-Trail game.

Sports Salmon Fishing Good In Many Spots

Salmon fishermen can expect good catches in a fair number of spots around Vancouver Island this weekend.

Sooke waters are yielding some hefty chinooks.

John Brohman topped catches in that area this week by landing two chinooks weighing 41 and 23 pounds Sunday on minnows off Possession Point. This catch just barely eclipsed the two weighing 41½ and 20 pounds taken Saturday by Bill Richardson while trolling with minnows off Secretary Island.

A few coho tipping the scales to nearly seven pounds have turned up along with a lot of chinooks in the 20-pound range. Both Possession and Secretary should be fished at the 50 to 60-foot depth close to shore.

Becher Bay is yielding chinooks to 36 pounds between Beechey Head and the Trap Shack. Phil Ray set the pace for coho fishermen this week with a 14½-pounder boated Sunday off the Trap Shack.

The coho are being taken on 30 feet of line and eight to 12 ounces of weight while the chinooks are best fished with 60 to 80 feet of line and 12 ounces to two pounds of lead.

Anchovies have been the most popular bait for both species.

The top fisherperson at Pedder Bay this past week was Edith Talbot, who caught a 35½-pounder in Whirl Bay on Sunday with an anchovy and then took a 29-pounder Monday using the same gear in the same spot.

On Wednesday, Rita Goulet landed an 8½-pound coho while Buzz-Bombing in Whirl Bay and Isabelle Mundie boated two coho weighing eight and 5¼ pounds while trolling with strip in Pedder Bay.

Oak Bay fishermen are landing chinooks to 21 pounds on both strip and Stingsildas on Chain Flats.

Chinooks to 30 pounds are being caught off Sidney Spit by fishermen jigging with either Stingsildas or Pirkens and Fairfax Point waters are yielding chinooks to 20 pounds on minnows and strip trolled close to the bottom.

Fishermen working off Wain Rock are catching chinooks to 30 pounds on Stingsildas and coho to six pounds form about half the return. Numerous limit catches have been recorded by both drift-fishermen and trollers.

Best spots further south in Saanich Inlet have been Bamberton, where they're landing chinooks to 22 pounds on deep lines, and Finlayson Arm, where chinooks to 27 pounds have been caught. A few coho to 8½ pounds are also showing.

Top spots for fishing up-Island this weekend should be Separation Point, Sansum Narrows, Tent Island, Thetis Island, Coffin Point, Porlier Pass, Clarke Rock, Hudson Rock, Harmac, between Snake and Entrance islands, Sangster Island, Lasqueti Island, Franklin River, Pallister Rock, Comox, Butler Point, Grant's Reef and Century Shoals.

NIBBLES: Hunters should note the 1978-79 hunting regulations are now available . . . Many changes have been made in the regulations, so it's a good idea to pick one up . . . Restrictions and closures have been made on caribou hunting because of a general decrease in population . . . Open seasons for moose in several areas of the north will be closed for two weeks during mid-season to reduce the take in the rutting period . . . And other changes of a more regional nature are numerous.

Little Five Under To Set Early Pace

SUNNINGDALE, England (AP) — Sally Little, a 26-year-old South African, Thursday took a one-stroke lead in the first round of the European Ladies Professional Golfers Association championship with little Laura Baugh of the United States in second place.

Little shot a five-under-par 33-36—69 in a round of six birdies with the bogey coming on the 17th. But it wasn't enough to distance Baugh, who started off quietly, turned in a par 36 and then cut loose with a stream of five birdies in a row to end up at 70 on the 6,174-yard, par 74 Sunningdale course.

On a day of rain punctuated by occasional shafts of sunshine, the two favorites — Americans Nancy Lopez and Judy Rankin — were overshadowed.

Lopez finished 10th with a one-over-par 73 while Rankin, the winner here last year by six strokes over Lopez, managed a 74.

Lopez, top money winner on the circuit this year, started off well with a first-hole birdie and six straight pars.

BOSTON TWO GAMES UP ON YANKEES

Red Sox Break Out

By The Associated Press

The pennant race in the American League's Eastern Division gets serious in the next couple of weeks—with the contenders all facing each other—and Boston manager Don Zimmer is glad the Red Sox have finally ended their home run drought.

The Red Sox stretched their lead by two games on New York Thursday, beating the Yankees 7-5 in the completion of a 17-inning game suspended after 14 frames the previous night and clobbering the World Series champions 8-1 in the regularly scheduled game that was held to 6½ innings by rain.

Jim Rice, who had only one home run in his previous 33 games, Fred Lynn and Bob Bailey homered for Boston in the rain-shortened contest.

"They're too good as hitters to think that could have continued," Zimmer said. "The way we've been playing, those were two big wins, because we've been struggling. This would be a hell of time to put on alittle streak because we're all playing each other the next 10-to-15 days."

The Red Sox, who have lost 11 of their past 16 games, now lead New York by 8½ games, Milwaukee by six and Baltimore by eight. Baltimore downed Milwaukee 3-2 in 10 innings Thursday. In the other AL games, Detroit edged Chicago 5-4 in 10 innings, California clobbered Oakland 8-1 and Seattle shaded Minnesota 6-5.

Boston begins a three-game series tonight in Milwaukee, and, after a three-game set agaist Cleveland at Fenway Park, the Brewers move in for four games. The Yankees, meanwhile, begin a three-game series at home tonight against the Orioles, then host Milwaukee for three games. New York begins a road trip with a four-game series at Baltimore on Aug. 11.

"The slump has been very tough, very tough," Rice said. "I just probably haven't been watching the ball. It's a stretch everyone goes in, and sooner or later you break out of it. I just went up there swinging the bat and trying to make contact."

Mike Torrez, 13-6, pitched a six-hitter against the Yankees in the regularly scheduled game, and Bob Stanley, 6-1, pitched three perfect innings after the suspended game resumed in the 15th inning to get that win.

The Red Sox won the suspended game in the top of the 17th on RBI singles by Rick Burleson and Rice, who wound up with five RBI in the two-game series.

"I sure hope everyone can break out of the slump at the same time," said Rice.

AROUND OUR SHORES

There'll be some keen competition at Cadboro Bay this weekend when the Royal Victoria Yacht Club hosts the Piaute Nationals.

This is a four-race (no throw-outs) Soling regatta and local Soling sailors are geared to pit their skills against competitors from Seattle and Vancouver.

Popularity of the 27-foot Olympic three-man boat is growing rapidly, and this weekend's regatta is being eyed as a stepping stone to the North Americans, to take place at San Francisco in October.

Racing will start at noon Saturday and at 10 a.m. on Sunday.

Soren Isbrand's Soling Danish Pastry of RVYC was a big winner in the annual invitational regatta of the Esquimalt Squadron, Canadian Forces Sailing Association, held last weekend, winning both the 8½-mile race from Cadboro Bay to Esquimalt Harbor and clearing up in series racing for Pacific Handicap Racing Fleet boats with ratings of 3.8 and under.

Second after Danish Pastry on Friday was another Soling, Rod Andrews and Rick Parkinson's Piute Logic, which also came third in series racing.

Third on Friday was Hazen Catle, skipperd by John Davies and Malcolm McAvity.

Winds were brisk and the first boat crossed the finish line in 1½ hours.

Third in series racing for 3.8 and under PHRF was Ron Jewula's Beawulf.

The first three 3.9 and over PHRF boats on Friday were Sandy McMillan's Amber Green, George Parks' Fairlight and Ed Haines' Lotte. Fairlight won the series racing for her division, runners-up being Bob Haines' Baracoutta and Amber Green.

Alex Fox of CFSA Comox was the top 420 skipper, edging Tim Hemett of CFSA Chilliwack and Gordon Holson of Comox. The three winning Laser sailors were Michael Francis, Rupert Holmes-Smith and Pat Davidson. Rob Thomson won in Fireballs.

RVYC will have series racing again on Wednesday, things getting under way at 6:30 p.m.

Paul Longridge's Saga was over-all winner this week in PHRF 3.0 and faster competition, being followed by Danish Pastry and Piute Logic.

In the PHRF 3.0 and slower division it was Mike Balderon's Menos, followed by Fairlight and Gil Pugh's Flattery. The top three Cal 20s were Cecilia Biden's Pegasus, Ed Life's Semiramis and Don North's Polaris. Holmes-Smith won in Lasers, being followed by James Allen and Brian Robinson.

Hard-working members of the Saanich Peninsula Sailing Association received a welcome boost this week when they heard Municipal Affairs Minister Hugh Curtis has sanctioned a $1,000 grant from the Recreation Facilities Assistance Program. The money will help the club extend its ramp and boat enclosure at Tulista Park in Sidney.

Boatwatchers in the Inner Harbor should keep an eye out for Mora, owned by Victorians Ian and Susan Grant. Along with their one-year-old son Andrew, they hope to be coming in next week after a year-long trek from Britain. After a 31-day leg from Acapulco to Maui, they're now nearing the end of their run from Hawaii to home.

They should have some fascinating tales to tell of such places as Granada, Morocco and St. Lucia's Marigot Harbour, where Dr. Doolitle was filmed.

Those of us who have enjoyed a visit to Princess Louisa Inlet in past years will mourn the death of 'Mac', the man who saved that marine park for us and always had a warm welcome for visitors aboard his houseboat.

Mac — his real name was James F. Macdonald — died in a Seattle nursing home earlier this summer after a long illness.

When Mac felt he could no longer look after the property he gave it to the non-profit Princess Louisa International Society for boaters to use in perpetuity.

In 1973 the society turned it over to the provincial government for a marine park and it became the Princess Louisa Provincial Marine Park.

Any time I go back there again I will be reminded of Mac holding court as only he could.

Vicettes Advance To Final

CJVI Vicettes finally got a decision over Esquimalt Combos on Thursday and advanced to the playoff final in the Victoria Senior Women's Softball League at Hyacinth Park.

Vicettes downed Combos 9-6 in the completion of the second game of a best-of-three semi-final to earn the right to face Victoria Skylarks.

The game started Wednesday and ended with a 6-3 decison for Vicettes but Combos protested an umpire's call in the fourth inning. League officials upheld the protest and the game was restarted in the bottom of the fourth with Vicettes leading 3-2.

The best-of-three final starts Tuesday at Hyacinth Park.

At Heywood Avenue Park, Macdonald Park All-Stars edged the Heywood League All-Stars 5-4 in a nine-inning men's exhibition game.

Langford "A" nipped Hampton 4-3 in the final of the Shirley Wilson juvenile girls' benefit at Belmont High School. A total of $135 was raised to help Wilson, who received extensive dental injuries in a recent game.

Munro Soothes PSAC

OTTAWA (CP) — Labor Minister John Munro Thursday assured members of the union representing most of Canada's public servants that their bargaining rights would not be jeopardized by legislation to link their wages with those of the private sector.

Munro told public service delegates at a Vancouver convention that amendments responding to their criticisms would be included in the legislation when it is reintroduced in the Commons this fall. The bill, introduced in March, died on the order paper when Parliament recessed for the summer.

The labor minister did not give details of planned amendments. But he said the union would have ample opportunity to appear before the government and make clear its position on any amendments brought forward.

The legislation would affect the pay scale and other benefits—such as pensions—of 325,000 federal public servants.

The Public Service Alliance of Canada (PSAC) says the legislation would make a farce of the collective bargaining process and has threatened a national strike if the government proceeds with it.

The Canadian Labor Congress has said it will oppose politicians who support such legislation.

But Munro said the government "by no means. . .intended to deny the collective bargaining rights of workers in the public service. . . ."

"Collective bargaining will continue to play a dominant and meaningful role in determining terms and conditions of employment in the public service," he said.

PM Toying On Vote, Says Tory

OTTAWA (CP) — The president of the Progressive Conservative party said Thursday Prime Minister Trudeau must set an election date immediately.

Robert Coates said in a statement Canadians have a right to know whether there will be an election this year or next and Prime Minister Trudeau has an obligation to tell them.

"The election is not some game where Prime Minister Trudeau plays with the public. It is absolutely essential that the public knows where the nation is going in the immediately future."

Merger Planned

RED DEER (CP) — Executives of the Western National Association (WNA) and the Committee for Western Independence (CWI) decided Wednesday to join forces to form a united political separatist force with branches in each of the four Western provinces.

Doug Christie, head of the British Columbia-based CWI, said memberships of both Western independence groups will vote on the merger later this year.

Christie, in the city after a four-province tour, said his group has about 2,000 members while the Alberta-based WNA boasts about 200.

The Victoria lawyer told a meeting of about 45 people that Western nationalists must be ready for accusations of being red necks and bigots if they are to meet their goals.

Christie said the new organization will have a board of directors from each of the four Western provinces.

Five key demands of the separatists are control by the Western provinces of immigration, tariffs, language, transportation policy and resources.

OH! CANADA ENDORSED

Mostly Raves for Language Kit

By RON CLINGEN
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — Three years and two million copies after it was first distributed, the government's "Oh! Canada" kit has won strong endorsation as an effective incentive for teaching a second language to children.

Results of an evaluation of the kit, released Thursday, showed 90 per cent of the 110 participating educators felt the kit had motivated their students to learn a second language and provided them with a better knowledge of Canada.

And the respondents unanimously reported that the children had fun using it.

"Oh! Canada" consists of a game, a comic book, a record, an activity book and a cassette. Since 1975, it has been distributed to some 2.5 million children between the ages of seven and 12, enrolled in Canadian schools.

During those three years, about 125,000 letters pertaining to the kit were received from all parts of the country by the office of Official Languages Commissioner Max Yalden and his predecessor, Keith Spicer. Half those letters were classified and analysed.

All of the 110 educators from nine provinces who participated in the study are involved in second language teaching or learning and have had first hand experience with the kit.

Of the letters analysed during the evaluation process, 49 per cent were from Quebec and 29 per cent from Ontario.

Only .2 per cent of correspondents were critical of the kit's apprach, format and content. Sixty per cent commented positively, while 39 per cent expressed no opinion.

Developed by the language commissioner's office in consultation with the council of ministers of education of Canada, the kit was designed to motivate children to regard learning a second language as a useful and happy experience. It exposes them to their country and its language challenges and opportunities.

The kit was provided to schools free of charge, on request.

Crown Postal Corp.: Six Months to Year?

EDMONTON (CP) — Postmaster-General Gilles Lamontagne said Thursday it could take six months to a year to convert the post office to a Crown corporation.

"It's a long process," he told a news conference. "I don't think it would be wise to rush it."

Lamontagne, here for the official unveiling of commemorative Commonwealth Games stamps on the opening day of the Games, was commenting on Prime Minister Trudeau's pledge this week to change the post office from a government department.

He said it would not be a "miracle solution" to problems plaguing the post office.

The move would centralize authority in the post office and eliminate the need for consultation with other government departments before internal decisions are made.

"We could act faster. It would be easier to run our own show."

A Crown corporation would also allow direct labor negotiations with workers and help remove operating decisions from political considerations, he added.

"We can be more objective about running the post office."

Lamontagne said the nature of the Crown corporation has yet to be decided, but that it will not be modelled on existing ones.

Prior to the news conference, the postmaster-general unveiled the four remaining stamps of a six-stamp Commonwealth Games commemorative set.

NO MORE CONSENT

TORONTO (CP) — Ontario residents no longer require the consent of their spouses to be sterilized, the Ontario College of Physicians and Surgeons has decided.

Since 1969, Ontario doctors have been required to obtain consent from both marriage partners before sterilizing a patient.

An Apology For Cossitt

Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — The chairman of the Manitoba Liberal youth commission has admitted he made a "mistake" in suggesting Conservative MP Tom Cossitt "bugged his own office to embarrass the Liberal government" and has sent Cossitt a written apology.

The apology, received by the Leeds MP Wednesday, was written by Robert Axworthy after Cossitt said lawyers had advised him he had grounds for a libel suit.

"I apologize for this and for any upset which I may have caused you," Axworthy wrote.

He added that a retraction would be made in the next mailing of a letter widely circulated to Manitoba Liberals on the letterhead of the Liberal Party of Manitoba.

Cossitt issued a statement July 19 referring to the letter and claiming he had been libelled.

Beer Flows In

added to work at cash registers in special express lanes for people bringing beer in from Washington during the B.C. Day holiday.

Customs officials have been swamped with booking the flow of beer and collecting the $3.20 a dozen duty charged by Ottawa and Victoria. In July, 100,000 shipments were registered compared with 1,000 in July, 1977.

The process also has created weekend waiting lines of more than two hours and on a long, hot weekend such as the one coming up, lines may have been 3½ hours long, Castonguay said.

Cars still will check in with Customs where they will get a card to take to the special lane, but there will be no parking and going into the office, he said.

If the set-up is successful, flashing red lights and signs reading "eight items or less" may be installed, Castonguay added.

Coupled with the limit increase last week to 10 cases from two, the express lanes should speed up traffic considerably, he said.

The change is a co-operative effort by Canada Customs, the Pacific National Exhibition — which supplied the booths — and the B.C. Liquor Control Board, which supplied the cash registers.

A meeting Thursday by the Canadian Union of Brewery, Flour, Cereal, Soft Drink and Distillery Workers Union apparently ended with a decision to take no action on the increasing shipment of American beer.

Union spokesmen couldn't be contacted — an answering service said this morning the executive had gone for the weekend.

Labor Minister Allan Williams was also adopting a do-nothing attitude, at least for the time being.

Williams said Thursday he will not become directly involved in the two-month-old shutdown of B.C. breweries until a provincial mediator has filed a report on the dispute.

Williams was responding to calls Wednesday from the brewery union and the Hotel, Restaurant, Culinary, and Bartenders Union for direct provincial intervention in the stalemated beer industry contract negotiations.

If the mediator fails to make any headway, Williams said, the labor ministry will probably appoint an industrial inquiry commissioner to make contract recommendations.

Keeping Woods Open Said 'Not Political'

A B.C. Forest Service spokesman said today it is unfair to allege political considerations are involved in keeping woods access open to the public despite extreme fire hazard.

Protection officer Russ Campbell said there has to be cause to bar the public from forest access roads normally open to travellers, and so far very few fires have been attributable to the public.

"The public is very conscious of the fire hazard," Campbell said.

Don Mackenzie, general manager of the B. C. Truck Loggers Association, said Thursday the service had been asked to close the woods but had not done so for political reasons.

The service, which could initiate such a move if it felt the situation warrants it, must apply to the cabinet for a closure order.

Dave O'Connor, president of the 97-member truck loggers association, said the closures are a good move.

O'Connor said the government put tourism ahead of the interests of B.C. residents and the economy.

He said that although the tourist with a camper truck who frequents the woods "is not a big spender," he represents a potential fire hazard.

"What's more important — a few tourist bucks or a burnt wasteland?" he asked.

Dam Case Settled

Ltd., Northern Construction Company, J. W. Stewart Ltd., Perini Pacific Ltd. and J. A. Jones Construction Company (Canada) Ltd.

The trial began in 1970 and became the longest and costliest civil litigation ever conducted in B.C., with legal costs estimated in the millions of dollars.

John Hall, Northern Construction vice-president, said Thursday both sides agreed to pay their own legal costs. He would not offer an estimate of the costs, and called the $33.95 million "a reasonable settlement by reasonable men acting in a businesslike way."

Justice J. A. Macdonald, who presided over a four-year B.C. Supreme Court trial that produced a 36,000-page transcript, said in a 500-page written judgment in December, 1974, that Hydro was in breach of contract and the six companies were entitled to "a very large amount of money."

The judge, whose life was insured by the two sides for $1 million to cover extra legal costs in the event he died before the case ended, called the litigation a legal extravaganza and urged the combatants to agree on the amount of damages.

When that failed, he ordered Hydro to pay the contractors $36,124,000, but Hydro, maintaining the dispute centred on organization of labor and equipment by the contractors, appealed.

In April this year the B.C. Court of Appeal, in a unanimous decision by three judges, ordered the damage suit back to Supreme Court.

Last Look At Eagle - Maybe

If you really want a last glimpse of the U.S. Coast Guard training barque Eagle under sale, you might be in luck if you drive to Point-no-Point Saturday night and wait a few hours.

The Eagle will leave Seattle Saturday morning, along with the B class sailing vessels that raced from Vancouver to Seattle.

Cmdr. Neil Norton, co-ordinator of maritime events for the Captain Cook bicentennial, said today the Eagle has just taken on a new complement of cadets for training.

In order to provide that training, Norton said Capt. Paul Welling of the Eagle will tack and go through other manoeuvres.

Norton said the best vantage point would be at Sheringham Point near Point-no-Point and that the Eagle should be in that area either late Saturday night or early Sunday morning.

The Eagle will not take part in the race but will join the other vessels at San Francisco's Golden Gate.

Long Ferry Lines Loom So Be Prepared: Official

It will be one of the busiest weekends of the year on B.C. Ferries and travellers should plan ahead to ease the waiting, traffic manager Bill Bouchard said today.

"It should reach a peak between noon and suppertime on Monday with people returning to the Island from Vancouver," he said.

"It's best to avoid that time if you can but, if not, then bring along an extra book or something and make the wait as enjoyable as possible."

Even at its worst, he said, the waiting should not be more than two hours.

Bouchard said nothing would be gained by coming back by way of Nanaimo because traffic will be equally heavy at Horseshoe Bay on Monday afternoon.

He said traffic will be light on the ferries starting at noon Saturday and continuing until Monday morning, when holiday crowds begin to return home.

During the slack period, the Queen of Alberni will be taken off for maintenance work.

"We hope to get the Alberni back into operation Sunday night so it will be ready for the heavy traffic on Monday."

The Alberni specializes in overheight vehicles such as campers and trailers.

Bouchard said anyone really determined to beat the crowd should consider the midnight ferry, which leaves Tsawwassen at 12:15 a.m.

"It has never been full yet. The heaviest load was 71 vehicles. It can carry 138."

The midnight ferry is a daily service.

"Traffic is starting to build up on the midnight run. We had three busloads of Whitecap (soccer) fans coming home from last night's game. This service is of particular interest to teams and sports fans."

She's No Geritol Junkie But a School Girl — at 74

May Robinson: She's making her life-long dream come true.

By LORRAINE LOCHERTY
Times Staff

Only laughter from the children in the street and a cool breeze ruffled the concentration of the elementary summer school students hunched over their desks.

They were determined to finish their last assignment, an arithmetic quiz, and then get outside and enjoy what was left of the holidays.

A shrill laugh crackled through the stillness and the spell was broken.

But the instigator was no 10-year-old relegated to the classroom for the summer vacation to brush up on school work.

It was was 74-year-old May Robinson who couldn't contain her mirth when she spotted the photographer crouched a few feet away taking her picture.

To May, who starts high school in September, nothing could be more natural than sitting in summer school brushing up on her arithmetic.

She scoffs at the idea she's too old to embark on an educational odyssey she hopes will take her through high school and eventually university.

The adventure is someting she planned on doing after she raised her family which includes a son who is a school principal and a daughter who is a university professor.

For the past four weeks she has delighted the kids at George Jay Elementary school with an enthusiasm that has baffled her teachers.

The indefatigable lady is a human dynamo that summer school teacher Bill Wile found hard to control at first.

"It took me two weeks to figure out how to handle her," he confessed. "But I laid down a few ground rules and things are going pretty well."

May, who left her arithmetic quiz for a few minutes to talk about her new lifestyle, is very convincing when she says she has enough stamina to make it through.

"Look at me, I have lots of energy," she stated emphatically, her blue eyes blazing.

"I walk 10 miles a day, swim three times a day and ride my horse. I haven't felt sick in years.

"I've been praying for this for 60 years."

May is starting Grade 8 in the fall and plans to enter college.

"They wanted to put me in Grade 10, but I don't have arithmetic. I couldn't do all that math and trigonometry so I'm going to start in Grade 8."

"They wait for me after school," says May, obviously impatient to get back in the classroom and finish her test.

"If you want to know anything else, just call me or come on over to the house. But don't come over today — I'm hitch-hiking to Port Renfrew after school," she said over her shoulder and headed back to her work.

FAMILY'S HOLIDAYS WRECKED BY THIEF

Sometime overnight Tuesday the culprit crept into the Burrys' carport beneath their townhouse at 2409 Chambers and made off with their tent trailer.

That may not sound much of a loss to most families. But to Darlene Burry it represented all her savings.

Mrs. Burry, 37, a welfare mother of three, saved two-and-a-half years to buy the small green fold-down trailer.

She'd only used it a couple of times. The last time was late in July when she took her family — Glen, 18, Patty, 14, and Sherri, 11 — to Goldstream Park for a weekend outing.

When they returned they didn't bother unpacking their gear because they planned to leave shortly for a week-long stay at the provincial park at Caycuse on Lake Cowichan.

The thief took everything — the family's sleeping bags, propane stove, lanterns, mattresses, and other odds and ends that Mrs. Burry had scrimped and saved to purchase over the years.

The problem is because of her low income she says she was only able to afford minimum insurance. It didn't cover theft.

"I don't know what we're going to do now," she says. "That trailer was everything to us. You can't save much on welfare. For years we did without a lot of things just so we could get the means to have a holiday every now and then like everyone else."

Fast-Paced Schedule Faces Philip, Andrew

For many in Victoria the weekend will be spit 'n' polish time, in readiness for a VIP visit Monday which will lend a royal touch to the Captain Cook festivities.

Prince Philip — a bit of an old salt himself — and his younger son Prince Andrew will be whisked through a round of receptions, ceremonies and visits during their day here.

After travelling from the Commonwealth Games in Edmonton they arrive at Patricia Bay airport at 11:30 a.m., to be greeted by Lieutenant-Governor Henry Bell-Irving, Mrs. Bell-Irving, deputy premier Grace McCarthy and local officials. The welcome takes place at the provincial government hangar on the industrial side of the airport.

The royal visitors will then be driven to the Legislative Buildings via the Pat Bay Highway, Douglas and Belleville, arriving at noon. This is probably the best opportunity for the public to get a glimpse of them.

Premier and Mrs. Bennett will meet the Duke of Edinburgh and Prince Andrew at the Menzies side of the buildings and escort them to the main steps before inviting Prince Philip to inspect the guard of honor mounted by the Esquimalt-based Third Candian Fleet School commanded by Lt.-Cdr. David Williams.

Following the inspection and a welcoming address by the premier, the Bennetts will escort the royal visitors to the cenotaph at the corner of Government and Belleville, for a 12:25 p.m. departure to a reception and luncheon at the wardroom, CFB Esquimalt.

The drive from the Legislative Buildings to Esquimalt will be along Wharf, Esquimalt and Admirals.

At 2:15 p.m. the party will return via the same route to Fort, and then to Cook, Rockland and Government House.

At 3 p.m. invited guests, many of them new Canadians, will attend a garden party at Government House. Prince Philip then returns to the Legislative Buildings at 4:30 to present Duke of Edinburgh awards to 25 recipients in the legislative chamber.

At 5:20 he will leave, by way of Belleville and Douglas, for a concert presented by the Victoria Symphony in the Cameron Bandshell at Beacon Hill Park.

The return to Government House at 5:55 will be via Cook and Rockland.

An official dinner at Government House attended by about 150 guests will end the day.

Prince Philip and his son will leave Government House at 9:30 a.m. Tuesday to drive to the airport. The route will be via Rockland, Cook, Pandora, Quadra and the Pat Bay Highway.

Province Approves Camosun Project

The provincial treasury board today approved $600,000 for preconstruction work at Camosun College's Lansdowne facility and has indicated approval in principle for an $8.5 million renovation and construction project to modernize the aging campus.

College council chairman Janet Baird said she is delighted.

The council has been trying all summer to get the funds in time to avert a space shortage this fall, she said.

"We'll have to work like mad now to get everything ready," Baird said.

The college plans to use part of the preconstruction money to build four portable classrooms and to renovate and the neighboring Paul Building and Tolmie Elementary School which it has leased from the Greater Victoria School District.

The treasury board has allocated $85,000 for the project manager, $325,000 for the architect's design fee, $40,000 for ground preparation, $100,000 for temporary accommodation and $50,000 for renovations to the Paul Building.

The treasury board also indicated approval in principle for a total $8.5 million renovation and construction package

Included is a multi-purpose building at a cost of $6 million.

The treasury board has approved in principle: renovations totalling $1.2 million to the Young and Ewing buildings on campus, an additional $650,000 for fees and permits, ground improvements and parking facilities at a cost of $250,000 and further alterations to the Paul Building for $150,000.

Stevie Was Different: Now He's Locked Up

By DEREK SIDENIUS
Times Staff

Little Stevie had all the cards stacked against him from the start.

Born with brain damage, he was a slow learner. He didn't utter his first word until he was six. His physical development was years behind his peer group. The doctors said he was hyperkinetic.

He learned to walk and ride a bike early but when it came to something he had to concentrate on, he couldn't do it.

He went to school because the law required him to go, but after nine years in special classes, he didn't learn anything. The kids teased him, especially the girls, who'd pick him up because he was so tiny and squeeze him. They thought it was funny. Stevie didn't.

He realized he was different. To escape, he'd retire to his bedroom, pull the sheets over his head and go to sleep.

As he entered his teens he began to display uncontrollable impulses. His parents grew concerned, cried out for help, but there was none available.

Stevie (not his real name) had his first brush with the law when he was 13. He was charged with unlawfully confining a young girl in Victoria. For that he was placed on one year's probation.

When he was 15 he was accused — his parents say wrongly — of assaulting a girl near his home. The Crown stayed the charge.

Then last April, when he was 16, he was picked up after an 11-year-old girl had been stabbed in an apparent attempted robbery in Saanich. The girls' wounds were not serious but police, psychologists and psychiatrists all concluded the boy was a menace, potentially dangerous.

He has been in custody since, at the Juvenile Detention Home in Victoria, Willingdon in Burnaby and Woodlands in New Westminster.

There is no where else to put him.

In an unprecedented move this week Judge Lawrence Brahan in family court finally ordered the boy to live in the JDH for an indefinite period while he undergoes treatment.

> The province has no facilities to treat a dangerously disturbed teen-ager, so what do you do? Lock him up — indefinitely?

The order, tantamount to incarceration, was in the form of a term of probation since the provincial government has no authority to jail juvenile offenders.

Stevie's parents don't blame the judge.

In an interview Thursday night, they said the judge had little choice because there is no facility in the province to treat troubled adolescents who require containment.

Since Stevie's arrest, government officials have agonized over what to do with him.

He's undergone four psychological examinations in Victoria and Vancouver.

The recommendations were essentially the same. Stevie should be placed in a closed treatment centre.

The question was where?

Dr. Jim Ricks of the provincial health ministry's integrated services branch suggested the boy be sent to a centre in Ontario, but human resources refused on the grounds it was not their policy to send juveniles to another province for treatment.

UBC professor Dr. Marjorie Chabot, an eminent psychologist, felt the boy needed a closed setting but stipulated it should be in Victoria because of the boy's close relationship with his parents.

Both the provincial and Greater Victoria Children-in-Crisis committees met to try to find a place to put him. The case was brought before the government's interministerial committee, and both the family court committee and municipal committee dealing with the JDH held emergency meetings to attempt to resolve the problems.

Stevie's parents said they had hoped to get their boy into Eric Martin Institute.

But two weeks ago, three officials of the hospital together with their lawyer appeared before Brahan to explain EMI couldn't take Stevie because it didn't have a treatment centre for adolescents.

They said they had an empty ward that could be used for such a purpose but the ministry of health has refused to supply additional funds to permit the hospital to acquire staff to run it.

Stevie, they said, couldn't be placed in an adult closed ward because the patients there are psychotic; nor could he be placed in the children's custodial ward because the parents would be upset having their children exposed to a boy deemed assaultive and dangerous.

Stevie's parents said Brahan was backed into a corner and frustrated because of the lack of facilities.

In handing down his sentence, he placed the boy on three years probation, the conditions of which are that he should live in the JDH and receive psychological, vocational and educational guidance under the direction of Dr. Ricks.

Stevie's parents wonder what's going to happen when their son turns 17 next February.

They wonder too, with the precedent now set, whether the JDH will be turned into a kind of treatment centre.

Their son is placed in a concrete-lined cell, with a cot and a small table. Wire mesh covers the tiny window in the cell door.

Although they praised the staff at JDH, they said the facility isn't acceptable for long-term care.

"How can the government just sit back and act the way they are. Their policies are terrible. They have facilities to treat adults and small kids, but nothing for adolescents anywhere in the province.

"We can't believe out son is the only child on Vancouver Island who needs treatment with containment.

"This experience — it's broken our spirits and our hearts . . . but he's still our boy . . . we're going to stand behind him."

CP Getting Conscience?

The Canadian Pacific Railway, historically speaking, has not been at all reluctant to exploit Canada's natural resources. But all of a sudden it seems to have developed a corporate conscience in this respect.

Consider the discreet little card from CP Hotels which appeared on dining tables at The Empress within the last few days.

It reads: "In order to conserve our natural resources, water will be served only upon request. Thank you for your co-operation."

Asked if some customers have been cynical enough to suggest that the hoped-for saving has more to do with dishwashing costs, manager Ted Balderson says there has been "some good-natured rib tickling" on the subject.

The policy is in effect at many of the CP hotels and for a couple of years the water-on-request service has been in widespread use throughout the United States, he claims.

"Let's face it, we're not energy conscious at all in this country," said Balderson — apparently in all seriousness. "One day we will pay for it."

The provincial agriculture ministry has launched — the only appropriate word — a floating p.r. campaign designed to emphasize the importance of farming in B.C.

It has installed on several B.C. Ferries vessels plying between Vancouver Island and the mainland a series of photographic displays, each depicting one sector of the agricultural industry such as ranching, dairy farming, poultry and tree fruits.

"I feel it is important for consumers to realize the importance of agriculture in their own province," says Agriculture Minister Jim Hewitt.

"The displays also tell our visitors what food production in B.C. is all about. We are able to deliver a top-quality product, so let's show them how we produce it."

Michael Riddell, 23, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ross Riddell, 115 Island Highway, has found his own way of celebrating the Captain Cook bi-centennial.

He's decided to discover the rest of Canada.

He left Victoria on his 10-speed bicycle May 14 and, making several detours, intends to make his way to St. John's, Nfld.

His father says Riddell will have cycled at least 5,500 miles before he packs his bike and catches the train back to the west coast in time to attend classes at the University of Victoria.

Forty British Columbia Fellows of the Royal Society of Arts have been invited to meet Prince Philip at a garden party, to be held at Government House on Monday.

The prince is the society's president.

Meet the new streamlined Bob McClelland.

B.C.'s health minister is sporting a new look, a new attitude, and setting a good example for paunchy British Columbians.

In just three months McClelland has shed 50 pounds from his 5-foot-9 frame, and now weighs a well-proportioned 165 pounds.

McClelland said he stopped smoking and drinking, cut out fattening foods, and started exercising.

He says he never felt better.

It wasn't his intention to set an example for the province but if that's the way it turns out, he'll be happy.

First the concrete sidewalk was laid and then the concrete sidewalk — or at least 20 feet of it — was pulled up again a short time later.

Residents of Cloverdale Avenue must have wondered what on earth was happening on the south side of the road near the Cloverdale-Blanshard intersection.

It seems this wasn't a fit of indecision on the part of the contractor for the Blanshard extension project, but just a plain, honest-to-goodness goof by someone in Saanich municipal hall.

Deputy municipal engineer George Gunn says the sidewalk had to be taken up to install a sewer line that was omitted from earlier plans for the highway alterations.

"It was an error on our part it was not put in sooner," he said.

There's no immediate dollar figure on the goof but Gunn says as the highways department has more work to do in the general area of the intersection, that may offset part of the cost.

A tongue-in-cheek report of Captain Cook's kidnapping is being officially labelled theft by the city police.

The "victim" is a life-size blow-up picture of Kelvin Andrew, one of the Captain Cook stand-ins for the bicentennial, which disappeared from the lobby of the Rithet Building on Wharf Street, home of the Captain Cook committee offices.

The seven by three feet picture cost $200 but one official said today they believe the heist was "a light-hearted affair."

Dyspepsia Attack Was No Fantasy

By L. L. COLEMAN, M.D.

I recall when I was a child that someone in the family always seemed to have an attack of "dyspepsia." Is there such a condition or was this just a family fantasy? — Mr. B.R.T.

Dear Mr. T.:

"Dyspepsia" is not a disease. It was always a descriptive term used for a variety of stomach and intestinal disorders. For years, dyspepsia was used as a term to describe bloating, abdominal fullness, excess gas, nausea, and acute bouts of indigestion.

The word originates from the Greek "dys," meaning "bad," and "peptin," meaning "digestion."

Another term used rather loosely was "billousness" to describe almost identical symptoms.

It is said that the stomach is a very sympathetic neighbor. It reacts when any disease is present in the liver, the gall bladder, the pancreas, the esophagus, or the small intestine. That is why the same few symptoms of nausea, vomiting and fullness keep popping up under the "umbrella" of dyspepsia.

The frequency of these symptoms emphasizes the fact that it takes good medical judgment to pinpoint the exact cause of these common complaints.

I have been warned years ago that if I continued to smoke I would develop emphysema. Now I am paying a penalty for my stupidity. Is there any chance that my lungs will ever go back to normal? — Mr. A.T.

Dear Mr. T.:

Chronic bronchitis, asthma, exposure to occupational fumes and tobacco are the major culprits in the production of emphysema. Far too many productive people have been deprived of their personal happiness because they have been made chronic invalids by this disease.

It is particularly sad because emphysema is a preventable disease. When recognized early and intensively treated, the changes in the lung can be kept from progressing.

Even those with moderately advanced emphysema can still be given a great deal of help. Even though emphysema is frequently irreversible, the use of antibiotics, positional drainage, and breathing exercises can still offer hope to the "respiratory cripple."

Is it always necessary to operate on a child who has crossed eyes? Does it ever get better by itself? — Mrs. N.P.

Dear Mrs. P.:

No, surgery is not always necessary. In fact a great many eye specialists make repeated examinations to determine the exact nature of the strabismus, or the crossed eye.

Wearing specially prescribed glasses when combined with exercises may be extremely beneficial. Orthoptics is a new specialty that deals with visual training and re-education of the eye muscles. A number of highly sophisticated devices are used to establish a better balance of the weakened eye muscles. Surgery is resorted to when the conservative methods have not been effective.

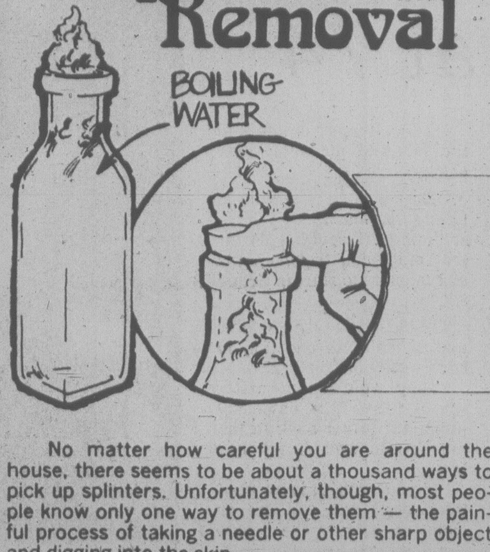
Splinter Removal



No matter how careful you are around the house, there seems to be about a thousand ways to pick up splinters. Unfortunately, though, most people know only one way to remove them — the painful process of taking a needle or other sharp object and digging into the skin.

Happily, there is a painless process that is easy and clean. Simply fill a heavy-duty bottle almost to the top with boiling water, place the injured spot over the mouth of the container and press down tightly. The pushing should force the flesh back from the troublesome bit of wood, and — with luck — the heat will draw it out.

SISTER'S A GOOD LOSER

MINNEAPOLIS (UPI) — Sister Joy, the fishing nun, says "catching fish is only half the sport. We've got to be good losers, too."

But not unlike other fisherfolk, she prefers winning.

She and her partner, former hospital patient Jack Maciosck of Isle, Minn., won a walleye fishing tournament last year. But they struck out in their latest contest on Mille Lacs Lake.

"I shouldn't say this. We caught only one fish big enough to keep," Sister Joy said in a telephone interview.

They lost the couples' fishing title to Dennis and Jennifer Schuett of St. Paul, who had a stringer of walleyes weighing 34 pounds, 7 ounces.

Don't Throw Safety Out Energy Window

OTTAWA (CP) — Can today's generation be trusted to use wood and coal heating devises without burning the house down?

Canada's fire commissioner says the question is being asked by commissioners and marshals across the country as environmentalist push use of renewable fuels in place of such non-renewables as oil.

"When I was young I was taught how to operate such furnaces and to operate drafts and to keep the chimney clean and the like," said R. A. W. Switzer in an interview Monday. "But today's young persons don't have that training. When it's cold they turn up the thermostat.

"If you don't handle them (renewable fuel furnaces) properly you've got a serious fire."

The commissioner said he and others like him have been concerned for some time about the matter.

He made the statement when asked the value of the annual Fire Prevention Week. The current edition of the Canada Gazette carries a government order that Fire Prevention Week is Oct. 8-14 and that Saturday, Oct. 14, is Fire Service Recognition Day.

Switzer said fire officials use the day to emphasize dangers and the need for prevention. They talk then of such things as wood stoves and furnaces.

The week is held well in advance of winter so people can take proper precautions before furnaces are in full-time use.

The Canada Gazette noted that in the last 10 years 702,000 fires have taken 7,500 lives, serverely injured at least 23,000 persons and destroyed $2.95 billion in property.

Losses are increasing each year, it says. It was imperative that improved fire prevention measures by undertaken "to prevent this economic waste and tragic loss of life in order that the nation's prosperity be maintained."

The week should be used to inspect dwellings, public buildings, stores, warehouses, factories, farms, mines, forests, theatres, hotels, hospitals and other "institutional and assembly buildings" to find fire dangers.

There should be fire drills in schools, factories and elsewhere and there should be instruction and public-interest lectures.

Switzer said there must be more emphasis on Fire Service Recognition Day, proposed by Canadian fire chiefs. It was inaugurated last year but largely ignored across the country.

The idea was to give recognition to the men who are on call 24 hours a day to save lives and property.

"People should pause and reflect about what they take for granted. Pick up the telephone and help is there."

He noted that there is more than firefighting in a fireman's life today. Fire services had para-medics and special equipment to preserve life.

Motorbikes Now Safer, Quieter

caveat emptor

Recently my son bought a motorcycle and I still remember how I felt when I heard the news. To put it mildly, I was shocked.

Like many mothers, when I first heard about it I could actually feel myself turning green with fear, clutching at a table to keep myself from falling over in a dead faint.

Fortunately, I heard the news first from his friend. That gave me a chance to collect myself and act like a reasonable human being when my son told me about his surprise.

And that's when I decided I wanted to know everything about these machines, so that I could at least understand my son's interest. After all, he is a mature man who paid for his own motorcycle out of his own money.

The first thing I learned was that the 'punk' image that was promoted by Hollywood and some motorcycle gangs is rapidly fading. People of all walks of life, and of all ages, both women and men, are riding the new, safer and quieter models introduced in recent years.

I began my research with the questions consumers most often ask about motorcycles. For example:

What's new about today's motorcycles?

The answer, I found, was tht they're smoother to ride, quieter, cleaner. They've advanced at a much faster rate than car technology and in a shorter period of time. Another thing is that unlike the old days, you don't have to be a master mechanic to look after one.

And the machines themselves are extremely safe. (It's the riders and other people on the road that you have to worry about.)

Where did the improved image come from?

The new image comes with the increasing popularity of motorcycling. For other riders such as motorcycle policemen, the image hasn't changed at all. It was good 20 years ago and it's good now.

The popularity comes from more people in their 30s and 40s are buying them. They have become more socially acceptable in all age groups.

The manufacturers have also played a role in upgrading the image, through a series of advertising campaigns which have portrayed motorcycle riders as clean-cut, respectable members of the community.

Can you teach yourself to ride a motorcycle?

Even if you've been driving a car for 20 years, it's not recommended that you switch to a motorcycle and start riding without first taking a course.

According to the safety experts, too many people teach themselves to ride and too many of them end up in accidents, because they haven't taught themselves properly.

The experts point out that there's a lot more to riding a motorcycle than driving an automatic transmission car, which is what most people who buy bikes are used to. For one thing, you have to learn to coordinate five functions simultaneously—the throttle, front brake, back brake, gear shift lever and clutch. In an automatic transmission car, you just have to push on the accelerator or the brake. As a result, you have to become more sensitive to road conditions.

Have you ever noticed, for example, how oil and rubber build up on the road, especially on bends, exit ramps and other places where people brake their cars? These are things a motorcyclist quickly learns about and which you wouldn't notice as quickly in a car. And you don't have to worry about them that much when you're in a car either, because the car is unlikely to flip over when you go into a skid.

Still another difference involves turning. Unlike a car, a motorcycle banks over on a turn. This is a tricky manoeuvre, because it's when your're turning that you're most likely to lose traction and fall over—especially if you either brake or accelerate while in a turn. According to Gordon Chabanais, a vetern of 8 years of riding, this is the main thing that novice motorcyclists do not know. "Usually—if they're lucky—they find out the hard way, by their mistakes. But sometimes you fall off and don't get another chance."

If you ride a motorcycle, a rider training course is as important for you as a good helmet. I'll discuss both in my next column.

Panes in Neck For Spry Deer

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Mr. and Mrs. Robert Zemke awoke to the sound of crashing glass.

When they checked, they found a large front window and a back window of their house broken.

Officials found some hair and a trace of blood on the windows — and the clincher — hoof prints in the living room. A deer had run through the house.

Bio-dex

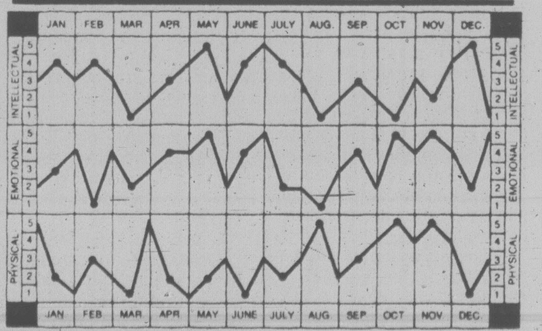
Aug. 5/78

By Ken J. Michaels

©BIODEX PRODUCTIONS 1978

Your computerized biorhythm

Dist. by Toronto Sun Syndicate



HOW TO USE YOUR CHART:

Locate your month of birth. The dots on each graph highlight your biorhythm readouts. Check the scales on the left or right for your Intellectual, Emotional and Physical factors, from 1 to 5. Add these three numbers to obtain your Bio-dex. The Bio-dex is computed on average population age based on official Government statistics.

BIO-DEX READOUT:

0-5 Negative Cycle-	If you plan to travel today, give yourself at least an hour more than you usually need for the trip.
6-10 Neutral Cycle-	Don't turn down invitations just because you feel tired. If the evening perks up, you will too.
11-15 Positive Cycle-	A smile and kind word at the right moment will win you support in a future confrontation.

Remember, small children function on cycles too. You babysitters and parents would be well-advised to check the Bio-dex of the children and be prepared to deal with the cycles at hand. A critical day is just as serious for a child as for an adult, but you must remember that it is up to you to supervise them. All the usual dangers are magnified when a child is coping with a low Bio-dex.

Man Survives On Rainwater In Tin Mine

FALMOUTH, England (Reuter) — A man fell 50 metres down an abandoned tin mine and survived for five days drinking rainwater, then walked away unscathed when rescuers pulled him out.

Police said John Elmes, 50, probably escaped injury because he bounced from side to side of the shaft as he fell.

But he was lucky to be found, they said. Local people shun the area near Land's End in the southwest of England because of the mines.

Three boys collecting wood for a campfire heard Elmes after they threw a stone down the mine.

It's situated not far from the causeway that, years ago, replaced a ferry service connecting the island with mainland Nova Scotia.

And from the time doors open in the morning until they close around nine at night, the place is crowded (at this time of year) with visitors in need of advice and help.

A friendly staff answers questions that range from where to stay overnight to how to find hooked rugs or the best salmon fishing in the middle of summer.

Printed information is given out along with marked maps that show various routes, among them the best way to travel the Cabot Trail, to circle Bras d'Or Lakes, to visit Keltic Lodge, to see Louisbourg National Historic Park or the Alexander Graham Bell Museum at Baddeck.

Our questions centred on the Cabot Trail, which we were lucky enough to see on a day of full sunshine, and the Fort Louisbourg restorations that I'm going to tell you a little about today.

First, however, let's go back to the causeway across Strait of Canso, from Auld Cove on the Nova Scotia mainland to Port Hastings.

While I waited for others in my party to receive answers to our questions, a man working in a small garden behind the low, white building told me something of its history.

He said for the best part of a century before it was built, people insisted no fill could hold against the Canso currents.

Then he pointed back across the narrow strait to a sheer rock cape he called "old Porcupine," and said that engineers took rock and fill from top to bottom of that promontory and dumped it into the strait.

Slowly the roadway pushed out into the strong tide. Thousands of tons of fill disappeared, but the causeway kept increasing in length and finally it reached the Cape Breton shore.

With that accomplished, the next step was to construct locks to take care of shipping through the strait and those were placed on the Cape Breton side.

Now let us go to the Fortress in Louisbourg National Historic Park.

Thumb through your history books and you will be reminded that, under the terms of the Treaty of Utrecht (1713), France was permitted to keep Cape Breton Island and Prince Edward Island, then known as Isle St. Jean.

English Harbor, renamed Louisbourg, was then selected by the French as the best place for an Atlantic stronghold and they built a fortress there between 1720 and 1745 to defend their possessions in the New World.

In 1745, Louisbourg was captured by a force of New England volunteers, assisted by an English fleet. Three years later it was returned to France by the Treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle.

Finally, in the Seven Years War, after being twice blockaded by British fleets, the fort was captured in 1758 and demolished in 1760.

Now an authentic restoration plan that includes about one-fifth of the fortress and the town that was enclosed by the defences is gradually moving ahead.

We saw it on a day when mist shrouded the horizon. At Lighthouse Point a foghorn moaned. Few people walked on the sands at Kennington Beach Cove, where James Wolfe (later of Quebec fame) led an attack during the 1758 seige.

At the fortress iself the sun appeared and disappeared, creating light and shadow to challenge the most experienced camera buff.

Among the buildings already open there is the King's Bastion with its prison, garrison chapel, soldiers' barracks, officers' rooms and the governor's apartments.

Other buildings include the guard house in the Place d'Armes, Falaise House, the armourer's house and the bakery and the laundry and stables.

Hotel de la Marine, on Rue Toulouse, within the fortifications but close to Porte Frederic, gives visitors a look at a typical waterfront cabaret of the 18th century.

Guides in old-time uniforms are there to tell you about the fort as it was in 1744. There are also descriptive recordings in many of the rooms that you hear through ear phones, in either English or French.

At Fortress Louisbourg history is being carefully researched and brought back to life, even to the painstaking effort of piecing together shards of glass and small pieces of pottery, dug up during excavation work, to recreate a long-ago jug, bowl, lamp or small ornament.

Postscript — Yes, indeed, I did eat lobster when I was in the Maritimes.

With a bib around my neck and large-size table napkins, a fork, a small pair of pliers and a steel pick at the ready, I positioned a platter of lobster in front of me.

I twisted off the claws, cracked each one with the pliers separated the tail-piece from the body and bent back the flippers of the tail-piece.

The fork was used to lift the tail meat and the pick to release meat in the small claws before sucking it out.

I even unhinged the back from the body and tried a bit of the liver-to-malley they call it down there. M-m-m-m, it was good!

dear abby

DEAR ABBY: My husband (I'll call him Max) spent six weeks in the hospital with a coronary and emphysema, but thank God he is going to be all right. His doctor told him he had to lose 45 pounds and give up cigarettes. Max lost 26 pounds while in the hospital and he didn't have one cigarette, which isn't easy for a three-pack-a-day man.

When I was at the hospital to take Max home, his doctor walked into the room smoking a cigarette! Max kiddingly asked the doctor for a cigarette, and would you believe, the doctor gave him one! (I could have strangled that doctor!)

Max has been home for three weeks and he's smoking again. I just know if that doctor hadn't given him a cigarette Max would have quit for good.

When I told the doctor what I thought of him he said, "I didn't think one would hurt him. Besides, I knew how much he wanted one because I can't quit either."

What do you think of that, Abby? If I hadn't witnessed this, I never would have believed it.

DISGUSTED

DEAR DISGUSTED: So what else is new? That doctor used inexcusably poor judgment, but if all the doctors who are hooked on nicotine were laid end to end, they would reach the Salk Institute in San Diego — which isn't a bad idea.

DEAR ABBY: It disgusts me to read the letters in your column that begin, "While straightening my daughter's room, I came across one of her letters (or her diary), and after reading it, I was horrified. Where have I failed?"

Perhaps these mothers should begin by looking at their own code of ethics. It is important for children, especially teenagers come to feel that they are individuals with privacy and rights of their own. Having a mother who comes snooping around reading personal mail and examining private possessions will surely force a child to become deceptive, secretive and constantly on the defensive, rather than to feel free to discuss personal problems and share private experiences with her mother.

If a mother feels it is necessary for her to know everything that happens in her child's life, she should teach the child early to trust her and come to her and share her feelings openly. This way the mother can express feeling of her own, and perhaps point the child in the right direction without promoting the kind of mistrust and tension that develops between mother and daughter when her only link with her daughter is through whatever tidbit she can find "while straightening the room."

The more I read about such mother, the more I appreciate my own.

GLAD I'M ME

DEAR ABBY: What do you do with a 17-year-old boy who refuses to clean his room? — MOM

DEAR MOM: You close the door to his room, but go in to rake it once a week. Sorry, Mom, but you must share in the blame for your son's sloppy habits. You should have trained him many years ago, when he was still trainable.

Youth Clinic

Young readers' questions on human relations and sex are answered by a panel of experts: Marion Powell, medical doctor; Blair Shaw, psychologist; Graham Cotter, clergyman; and Bruce Vichert, social worker. Send questions to Youth Clinic, The Victoria Times, 2621 Douglas St., Victoria, B.C., V8W 2N4.

DEAR DR. COTTER: I am a 15-year-old girl with a problem. Most girls my age go out with guys two or three years older. These guys usually have different intentions than we do. They sometimes want to go all the way if they get a kiss out of you.

If you say yes, you could get into trouble, and if you say no they think you're frigid and don't want to do anything. Which way should we go?

ANSWER: First, don't be put into the role of someone who only reacts; the older boys choose younger girls when they are not sure of themselves with people as mature as themselves. So, pick and choose who you go out with, not in terms of who asks you, but in terms of who you want, and who is closest to being an equal.

Then, choosing what you do with someone must be a matter of conscience. Is a kiss right? Is "all the way" right? That depends on what standards you have and how your conscience lives up to your standards.

Does it matter whether someone thinks you are frigid? Do you get your standard from what a collection of macho males think of you? Or is your standard something inside yourself which has to do with what you think of yourself and whether you respect yourself?

DEAR MR. VICHERT: I am 16, and my boyfriend is also 16. I love him very much, but I'm unable to figure out my problem. I'm not sure whether I'm just selfish, and always think of myself or if I'm serious enough for him.

Every time I get drunk and we would go out and have a good time with our friends and then that at the end of the night when we're going home I end up crying and saying, "You don't love me, but I love you." Is it because I like to know he cares or what?

ANSWER: I am sure that you would like to know if he cares. We all need to know from the people we care about that they care about us also. I think it is too bad that you are having to ask him if he cares or not.

This raises a couple of questions. Do you have to ask him because he never tells you? Do you have to ask him because he never expresses his caring in the way he acts towards you? Do you have to ask him because he doesn't treat you as if he cared for you?

If the answers to the above questions are yes, then the next question would be why are you going with him, or why is he going with you?

However, another question is do you ask him because you have had too much to drink and you are not in control of your own behavior. I would also ask the question, how much do you care for him if you have to get drunk to have a good time? Perhaps the question that you need to as is "Do I really love him?"

Talk to him about your feelings and the questions that you have.

DEAR DR. POWELL: I am 16 years old and have a problem. I have very noticeable wrinkles around my eyes. They're thin wrinkles, that will probably soon creep down my face. I didn't have them a few years ago. I also have scars all over my face from my acne and I just can't stand the sight of my face. My friends tell me that I have a pretty face, if it wasn't for the scars. Please tell me how these wrinkles developed? Could you tell me a place where I could go to remove my scars and the wrinkles? How much would it cost to have my face fixed up?

ANSWER: It is sad to hear anyone say they cannot stand the sight of their own face. Look in the mirror carefully and ignore the wrinkles and scars. Your eyes and your smile are the two things other people notice first. However, there is something that you can do about the scars but it will mean going to a skin specialist or a dermatologist. Your family doctor will make a referral.

Wrinkles are a sign of aging and 16 is too young for you to show this type of aging.

POPE PAUL VISITS GRAVE

CASTEL GANDOLFO, Italy (AP) — Pope Paul visited the grave of a former Vatican diplomat and said that his own death cannot be far away.

The 80-year-old pontiff was driven from his summer palace in Castel Gandolfo to Marino to pay homage to Giuseppe Cardinal Pizzardo, who died in 1970 at the age of 93 after serving in the Vatican's diplomatic service under five popes.

"We hope to be able to meet him after death, which for us cannot be too far away."

Paternity Wrangle Settled

LOS ANGELES — An interim out-of-court settlement has been reached in the paternity suit filed by actress Marsha Hunt against Rolling Stones singer Mick Jagger, the lawyer for Miss Hunt said Thursday.

Miss Hunt, 31, who appeared in the London production of the musical Hair, had asked for child support of $2,290 a month for her daughter, Karis Hunt Rutledge, in a suit filed with the Los Angeles Superior Court last month. The child was born in London on Nov. 4, 1970.

The lawyer, Marvin Mitchelson, said the interim settlement has been filed with the court and both sides have agreed not to reveal its contents.

Miss Hunt filed her suit soon after it became known that the Rolling Stones were to star in two concerts in nearby Anaheim last month. Both concerts were sold out.

MOSCOW — Christina Onassis and her new husband, Sergei Kauzov, postponed their honeymoon and did not leave Moscow as scheduled Thursday for Lake Baikal in Siberia, Soviet sources said.

The sources said Miss Onassis was tired from the Tuesday wedding and the pressures of reporters and photographers. They said the couple decided to delay the trip a day or two.

LONDON — Queen Mother Elizabeth won praise Friday as one of those people whose enthusiasm enhances life. The tribute came from her grandson, Prince Charles, in a book celebrating her 78th birthday.

"Ever since I can remember," said the 29-year-old heir to the throne in the book's foreword, "my grandmother has been the most wonderful example of fun, laughter, warmth, infinite security and above all, exquisite taste in so many things."

PARIS — Two Britons who narrowly missed making the first Atlantic crossing by balloon last week set three world records nonetheless, the International Aeronautical Federation (IAF) announced Thursday.

Donald Cameron and Christopher Davey, who came about 165 kilometres short of the European coast last Sunday, set records in distance, altitude and duration for their class of balloon, the Paris-based IAF said in a statement.

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Carlos Chavez, father of Mexico's national symphony and renowned director and composer, died of a heart ailment Wednesday. He was 79.

Chavez composed six symphonies and various concertos for violin, piano and trombone, and conducted orchestras around the world.

OTTAWA — Norman McLeod Paterson, Canada's oldest senator, turned 95 Thursday but he isn't ready to retire yet.

"When I was appointed to the Senate in 1940 my ambition was to stay for 40 years," said the white-haired Liberal from Thunder Bay, Ont. "I only have about 1½ years before I reach that."

MOSCOW — U.S. businessman Francis Crawford, accused of currency violations, was ordered back to Lefortovo prison today for more questioning.

Crawford, 38, a native of Mobile, Ala., denies Russian charges that he buought large amounts of rubles on the black market.

Death-Plunge Family's Dad Claimed to Be God

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah (AP) — Seven children who plunged 11 storeys from a hotel balcony had lived in $90-a-day luxury with a father who thought he was God. The children never went to school and rarely spoke to strangers, eating meals in their suite and shunning the hotel pool.

Thirteen-year-old Elizbeth David was in critical but stabilizing condition early today.

Despite pleas from horrified people who watched from the sidewalk Thursday morning, Rachel David helped or pushed her children, ranging in age from five to 14, from the balcony. Police said at least three jumped willingly, but witnesses said the younger ones struggled and tried to grab the railing.

The family had secluded itself in the suite for 14 months. Hotel employees said the children spoke to strangers only with their parents' permission. They said the children stayed in the suite most of the time, never used the hotel pool and never went to school. They were taught by their parents.

Penny McDonald, a desk clerk at the hotel, said meals were either sent up from the hotel coffee shop, or David would bring food home. She said he paid the $90 rent every day with a $100 bill.

Police Sgt. Brent Davis, who said he knew David personally, said he never knew the six-foot-four 300-pound man to have a job. He said David believed he was God.

An excommunicated member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (Mormon), he had formed his own religious cult, consisting mostly of his immediate family members and a few friends, Davis said.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Steve Snarr said he believed the cult leader may have lived from money given him by his followers.

Snarr said Immanuel David was under investigation for wire fraud, as were some of his followers.

David's body was found in a borrowed van Tuesday. Police said he died of carbon monoxide poisoning.

Thalidomide Payout Increased

LONDON (AP) — The Distillers Co., which marketed the thalidomide drug that resulted in about 400 British children being born deformed, announced Thursday it will pay out another £4.18 million ($8 million) to 69 children whose parents claim they are victims.

That brings the total paid out or committed by the firm since the drug was marketed in Britain in the early 1960s, to £30.66 million ($64 million).

A Distillers spokesman said the company hopes this latest settlement to children not originally considered direct victims of thalidomide will be accepted "as a reasonable and equitable way of bringing this matter to a conclusion."

The payout follows a recommendation by Sir Alan Marre, a former ombudsman who conducted an independent inquiry into claims against Distillers, that 20 of the 69 children should be considered thalidomide victims and receive full compensation from Distillers and the other 49 should receive a £9,845 ($17,000) payment each from the firm for "great distress and anxiety."

Swiss Demand Ouster Of KGB Agent in UN

GENEVA (UPI) — Switzerland said today it asked the International Labor Organization, a United Nations agency, to fire Soviet official Gregory Miagkov because he was a risk to Swiss security.

ILO spokesmen said Miagkov, 51, who has been with the agency for 10 years, was told on Monday this week that his contract had been terminated.

Miagkov, his wife and two children left for Moscow Thursday.

Swiss government spokesmen said the ILO was asked to get rid of the Soviet functionary after Western intelligence services learned that he was a KGB officer.

Miagkov was the second ILO Russian official to quit Geneva in two months.

In June, Vladimir Bukreyev rushed back to Moscow after British reports identified him as a KGB agent.

While Miagkov worked in the ILO's professional training sector, Bukreyev had an extremely influential position as director of ILO publications, which gave him control over all ILO publications distributed in the world, and especially in the developing countries.

Stowaway Dog Found In Bag

LONDON (CP) — Abraham van de Groes, who travelled through airports in Toronto, New York and London with a small, undetected dog in a perforated flight bag, has been fined £400 and costs for contravening the stiff British rabies regulations.

Authorities here said van de Groes cleared all three airports but was detected by a constable as he travelled through the downtown Victoria Station.

Laker, the carrier from New York to London, said the man travelled with the bag under his seat and that they had no knowledge that the dog was aboard.

Officials said the dog had been put in quarantine and shipped under supervision to The Netherlands, van de Groes's destination.

Under British regulations, promulgated to keep the continental rabies outbreak from spreading here, all incoming dogs and cats must be declared and put into quarantine for six months.

Two-Week Backlog Of Airline Standbys

LONDON (AP) — Hundreds of Canadians and Americans waiting here for cheap standby tickets home are still stranded despite British efforts to get them airborne. Standby space is scarce and airlines say they would lose money by running extra flights for cut-rate passengers only.

Some have been camped under plastic sheets for 10 days waiting for seats, and airline officials said it could be two weeks before the backlog of 1,500 to 2,500 North Americans at London's Heathrow and Gatwick airports is reduced significantly.

The seats the airlines are permitted to sell at the cheaper standby rate, and which the stranded travellers had hoped to buy, are being filled with full-fare customers instead.

Britain's Civil Aviation Authority (CAA) said it would permit additional flights to clear the backlog, but the airlines said they would lose too much money.

Ann Noonan, a CAA spokesman, said: "We think the airlines made a great thing about cheap tickets but they failed to get across the fact that it depends on limited availability. It's a lesson that has to be learned in life: If it's cheap there's bound to be a snag."

The number of standby seats are limited by international airline agreements.

To ease the lines of waiting tourists, the CAA said the airlines could use up their combined standby eligibility through October at any rate they wanted.

Trans World Airlines, which has seven flights daily from London the various points in the United States, had two standby seats to sell Wednesday and two more Thursday.

Laker Airways was permitted to fill empty seats on its advance-booked flights with standby passengers but it said no empty seats are in sight.

N-Test Awards Ruled

WASHINGTON (WP) — In a decision that could affect thousands of former soldiers, the board of Veterans Appeals has decided to award service-connected disability benefits to a U.S. Army veteran suffering from leukemia who claimed his illness resulted from exposure to radiation during a 1957 nuclear weapons test.

Donald C. Coe of Tompkinsville, Ky., whose case was ruled on Tuesday, was one of 300,000 servicemen who took part in nuclear weapons tests in Nevada or at the Pacific test sites between 1948 and 1958.

Some 40,000 of the soldiers, including Coe, participated in the 1950s in a series of nuclear tests in which troops conducted maneuvers through the test site within hours of the explosion. The other soldiers were witnesses to nuclear explosions.

About 2,400 former soldiers who participated in the tests recently reported to the Defence Department that they have subsequently come down either with leukemia or some other form of cancer.

amount of compensation and benefits due him.

A VA regional board will now determine the extent of Coe's disability because of the leukemia and thus set the

"PJ didn't mind the hippos. The gun shot scared him."

The Bridge Expert

By FRED KARPIN

The world's leading master-point holder is Barry Crane of Hollywood. One of the characteristics that has enabled him to attain his victories is his reputation for making opening bids on hands that most players would tend to pass. His less-skilled opponents, being aware of his faculty of manufacturing bids out of thin air, thus tend to assume hat whenever he opens the bidding, he is overbidding.

This attitude often leads his opponents into bidding on hands with which they would normally pass. Such as the case in today's deal, which was played in the National Mixed Pair Championship of 1975. This deal enabled Crane and his partner, Kerri Shuman, of Los Angeles, to win the event. Mrs. Shuman was sitting West; Crane was in the East seat.

The bidding:

North	East	South	West

Pass	2 ♠	Pass	Pass
Dble.	Pass	3 ♣	Dble.
Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ♡.

Most bridge players, sitting in the East seat, would have passed the hand. But Crane, opening all hands that resemble an opening bid, chose to open with one heart. When Mrs. Shuman responded with one spade, Crane promptly raised to two spades. Technically, Mrs. Shuman should have bid again. But she, of course, was aware of Crane's propensity for opening minimum and sub-minimum hands. So she passed.

But North wasn't going to let Crane "steal" a part-score. Counting on his partner to have a lot of good cards, North, despite his horrendous hand, re-opened the bidding with a takeout double! South bid three clubs and, as can be observed, he did have a really good hand. But it didn't help him very much.

West doubled three clubs, for penalties. After she had opened the king of hearts, and the dummy was put down, everybody gasped at North's audacity. When play had ended, it was rather apparent that North-South had paid a high price to keep Crane-Shuman honest, for they went down 700 points, giving the winners a top score on the deal.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

Astrological Forecast for Saturday, August 5
By Sydney Omarr

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You solve longstanding problem. Accent on humor, celebration, versatility, relating to co-workers or others who share your interests. Gemini, Sagittarius figure prominently. Light touch wins. Steer clear of one who tempts you to break diet, health rules.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Accent on speculation, change, intensified relationship, dealing with children. Aquarius, Scorpio and Leo play key roles. You break through red tape. Popularity surges — especially where members of opposite sex are concerned.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You can get to bottom of basic issues. Key is to search and analyze. Discuss home decorating, repairs — communicate your own concepts. One close to you will be an active ally. Virgo, Sagittarius persons figure prominently.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Family, short trips, resolving financial dilemma — these are on agenda. You can successfully close sales or purchase. Aries, Libra persons figure in scenario. You get "interesting" call or message — perhaps from Taurus or Scorpio.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): What seems out of reach is closer than you might suspect. Gemini, Sagittarius figure in scenario. Diversify, ask questions, call, write and communicate. Attend social affair. Aura of gloom will be replaced by cheer!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You find way to overcome restrictions. Important person in your life may be confined — it is temporary. Diplomacy is your ally. Taurus, Libra, Scorpio persons figure prominently. Accent on publishing, communication, overseas telephone call.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Be willing to analyze, to accept facts as they exist. Money, involving partner or mate, commands spotlight. You might gain access to privileged information. Occult may be part of scenario. Relative decides to confide. Listen without becoming inextricably involved.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Go slow, be positive concerning property rights. Domestic adjustment is indicated. Marital status commands attention. Taurus persons plays key role. Be discreet, quiet in sense that you play cards close to chest. You're going to learn plenty!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Be wary of reports which "glow." Means false alarms could be a part of scenario. Services, employment, basic issues, nutritional requirements command more-than-usual attention. Pisces, Virgo individuals figure prominently.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Involvement, money and love dominate your personal scenario. Challenge is present — and you can use it as a steppingstone. One who cares, who has your best interests at heart will prove it. Accept responsibility — professional and personal. You can smash open a door of major opportunity!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Stand firm — some try to make you change your position on what should be done. You'll prove important point — and rewards can be considerable. Key is to be thorough, to collect and delineate data. Your views will be vindicated.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Legal matters dominate. Take conservative course. Older individual, who gives impression of being cold towards you, can actually become an ally. State your case in unhurried fashion.

IF AUGUST 5 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are inquisitive, extravagant, and attractive to the opposite sex. You succeed with the written word. Gemini, Virgo persons lay key roles in your life. Changes, travel, a more active social life — these are featured in October. You have sense of the dramatic — and you often make use of it. Someone "important" could come into your life in August.

FUN WITH FIGURES

By J.A.H. Hunter

"Two boys and two girls." Jim replaced the photo. "That was Ann. She's in her 'teens."

Greg smiled. "Quite a family for these days," he said. "How old are the boys?"

"You figure it out," Jim replied. "If you add the product of the girls' ages to the square of Elsie's age you get the square of her brother Jack's age, but added to the square of Ann's age it gives the square of the other boy's age."

How old were the boys?

(Answer Monday)

Yesterday's answer: SISTER was 121538.

TOURISM RECORD BEING SET- GRACE

Travel Industry Minister Grace McCarthy said Thursday the latest figures show that 1978 will be a record year for tourism in B.C.

She said the number of people crossing the border at the United States is up, as well as the number of people coming to the province from other continents.

Mrs. McCarthy said hotel and motel rooms in Victoria and Vancouver have been fully booked on several days this summer, and package and sightseeing tour operators also are reporting dramatic increases in business.

The minister also said the Princess Marguerite is continuing to carry record crowds of visitors to Victoria from Seattle. In July, almost 34,000 U.S. tourists travelled to Vancouver Island via the old steamship, a seven-per-cent increase from last year.

DEEPSEA SHIPS

Victoria — Pacific Princess, cruise ship.
Plumper Sound — Amstelveen.
Chemainus — Harfleur.
Nanaimo — Swan Arrow.
Duncan Bay — Crocus.
Gold River — Lion of California.
Alberni — Rio Iguazu.
Esquimalt — Dilkara, in for work.

Sidewalk Liquor Refused

Two applications for beer garden permits were given quick approval by Victoria council's business licensing committee Thursday — but a cafe that wanted to serve liquor at sidewalk tables was left out in the cold.

Special occasion permits to allow beer gardens were issued to the James Bay Community Association and to the Stuffy McGinnis Major Men's Softball League.

The permits were given with practically no discussion — but when it came to an application by the Mount Everest Cafe, council members were in disagreement.

Ald. Robin Blencoe supported the restaurant's bid to serve drinks at its sidewalk tables on Government, saying it would help break down current attitudes towards drinking.

Ald. Murray Glazier disagreed, saying that "I'll support any proposal that will induce people to use liquor in a civilized way but I don't think that's the issue here."

Glazier said if council allowed people to start drinking on the street outside the Mount Everest Cafe then soon they'd be doing it outside other establishments — perhaps even pubs.

In the end the committee decided not to approve the restaurant proposal, but not to disapprove of it either. And while that means the cafe could still manage to get a permit through the Liquor Administration Branch (LAB), chances of that happening are slim.

Magnifying-Glass Magic

Among the people of Victoria interested in plants are scores who are not gardeners. In some cases they never have been, yet their interest is often greater and more intense than is found among down-to-earth gardeners.

These are the folks who use wheelchairs for locomotion, or who have other limitations preventing physical gardening activity. For them the endless wonderworld of visual plant study opens its doors. Books for reference and living plant specimens are their treasures to be explored minutely.

Tiny flowers, leaves with intricate veining, large leaves with color patterns in early fall, scented blooms and intricately constructed blooms — these are the gifts to take when visiting these dedicated plant people.

With the aid of a hand magnifying glass, which every gardener should have as a part of daily work, your friend is likely to find points of interest in your gifts that you never suspected existed.

Just now there are racemes of tiny flowers on the Sweet-Pepper bush, one of the Clethra genus. This is a hardy diciduous shrub belonging to the Heath Family even as does the mighty native Arbutus. Although attractive in its shrubby outline and light green leaves, it is the open flowers which rivet the attention.

A botanist would be able to identify each tiny flower part, but the simple enjoyment of form and color is something we would like to share with plant people who need just a little more beauty in their lives.

Salvia blossoms, whether they are yellow, blue or red in color, show a hairy surface under a magnifying glass which is not apparent when viewed with the naked eye.

Leaf descriptions in encyclopedia include such words as tomentose, hirsute, pubescent. All refer to hairiness in some degree but often we may be quite unaware of the condition without the aid of a glass. It will reveal the density of the hairs, the color and even their shape.

Leaf veinings assume more importance. A study of a few larger leaves reveals amazingly artistic forms. Worked out on paper a leaf vein design repeated in strips of bands on materials may become a popular wallpaper design or a delightfully free design on dress material.

The common Canadian Goldenrod turns out to be a miniature daisy, truly exquisite in proportions, and the summer Meadowrue (Thalictrum) exhibits a daintiness which makes me wish I were artist.

Even the minute flowers of late summer wild grasses and roadside plants are worth studying when enlarged for the eyes to enjoy their arrangement and design. Their viewing may open new vistas of pleasure and perhaps create a new life interest for someone you know.

Try this simple approach to beauty for someone unable to tread the garden path. You don't know where the idea may reach fertile soil, bringing forth rich rewards in some form of art.

HOW TO WRITE A GOOD CLASSIFIED ACTION AD

1—IT'S BEST to start your ad with the name of the article or service you have to offer. If you have an apartment, room etc., for rent, or property for sale: start your ad with the location.

2—BE CLEAR. Readers respond more quickly and favorably when given complete, definite information. Always include the price in your adveertisement.

3—MAKE IT EASY for the reader-prospect to reach you. Always give your telephone number or your name and address. If you do not have regular hours, state a preferred time for the prospect to get in touch with you.

4—PLAY SAFE. You get the greatest reader attention by using consecutive insertions. A six-day order is best and costs less, and you can, of course, stop your ad as soon as you get the results you want. You pay only for the days your ad appeared. Lower yearly rates are available to those who wish to keep their services or products before the public.

5—PLACE YOURSELF in the reader's position and ask yourself what you want to know about your offer. The answer you give will make a good Want Ad.

6—GIVE YOUR PROSPECT every inducement you can with good copy. Classified action ad readers have the money and are already interested in buying the merchandise or service you have to offer; the details and information you give are the most important.

7—TO PLACE YOUR AD, call 386-2121, your direct line number to fast Want Ad action. A courteous, efficient advisor will be glad to help you word and place your order. And remember, Classified Action Ads afford you the most complete coverage. Telephones are open 8:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. for you daily, Monday through Friday; 8:00 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Saturday. Don't allow the reader to speculate.

Polio Vaccine Shortage Denied

TORONTO (CP) — There is no shortage of one type of polio vaccine and there has been no accident at Connaught Laboratories Ltd., a Connaught spokesman said today.

Dr. Tony Larson, provincial epidemiologist in Vancouver, said Thursday supplies of Sabin vaccine might stop because of an unspecified accident at Connaught.

Anastasia Erland, public affairs officer at Connaught, said today that representatives from Connaught last week asked epidemiologists in each province to conserve supplies of the vaccine.

Connaught decided recently to start manufacturing vaccine from a new virus seed because of a new testing procedure. Because it takes months to produce a new batch of vaccine, Connaught requested that doctors conserve supplies, she said.

It is not unusual for a doctor to take a couple of doses out of the vial and toss the rest out, Mrs. Erland said.

Mrs. Erland said the Salk vaccine is just as effective as Sabin and that there is no shortage of Salk vaccine.

She said most doctors prefer Sabin vaccine because it is oral and easier to give. Salk vaccine must be injected.

She said it was discovered last week that Connaught's Sabin Type 3 vaccine did not meet the criteria set by an English company so Connaught, a worldwide distributor of the vaccine, decided it had to change its manufacturing procedure.

It took until this spring to decide to change the virus seed from which the live vaccine is produced, she said.

Meanwhile, more than 1,400 residents of Oxford County in Western Ontario attended a polio clinic Thursday in Norwich, near Woodstock, after two cases of the paralysing disease were diagnosed in the area.

The clinic was set up by the Oxford County board of health as a precaution after Reick Van Vliet, 24, and his brother, James, 14, were isolated in hospital in London, Ont., with what doctors diagnosed as polio.

Larry Arneill, acting director of health-inspection services for Oxford County, said about 1,400 doses of oral vaccine were administered in sugar cubes at the clinic.

Arneill said there will be additional clinics in Tillsonburg and Woodstock, probably next week.

Gary Kuney, a Norwich storeowner, said a growing resentment toward the Dutch community might develop because of fears about the disease.

"It's like a firecracker that has been lit," Kuney said.

"Right now, the disease seems to be contained with the Dutch people, but if it breaks out and infects other ethnic groups in the community, the firecracker is going to blow up."

M-B Ruled Negligent In Death

NANAIMO (CP) — A coroner's jury ruled Thursday that MacMillan Bloedel was negligent in the accidental death of David Ashby, 52, an employee at the company's Harmac pulp mill.

The jury said the company had failed to follow certain safety regulations stipulated by the Workers Compensation Board.

Ashby, a company employee for 28 years, was killed July 17 when he fell through a hole in a mud filter hut's roof to the concrete floor about eight metres below. The pathologist's reports showed Ashby died instantly from severe brain damage.

He was apparently on the roof with a sledgehammer trying to loosen a buildup of lime around the stack when he broke through the roof.

A co-worker reported that before starting the work, Ashby reported that the roof was shaky.

John Maxwell, pulp mill inspector for the board, said regulations require that a temporary floor or platform be installed as close as possible to the working level in areas that would not safely hold the weight of the workers.

The roof was made of a building material called transite. The jury recommended that all working areas built with transite material be covered with an iron grill platform and that safety belts be used.

Collision Lands Trio In Hospital

Three men were treated at Royal Jubilee Hospital after their vehicles were heavily damaged in a collision at Lansdowne and Foul Bay at 7:25 a.m. today.

Oak Bay police said a pick-up truck driven north on Foul Bay by Alexander Jossul, 1059 Oliver, collided with a car driven west on Lansdowne by Samuel Swetnam, 1420 Beach, causing $1,000 damage to the truck. The car was listed as a writeoff.

Flower Festival In Duncan

The fourth annual Festival of Flowers and Song opened today in the Cowichan Valley, at the same time as a week-long celebration of the Captain Cook bicentenary.

The festival of flowers, organized by the Duncan Downtown Business Association, opened this morning with the crowning of Festival Queen Mabel Flett, a member of the Duncan Old Age Pensioner Association.

Musical entertainment and puppet shows were scheduled this afternoon.

On Saturday, the annual festival parade will wend its way through Duncan. Included in the parade is the 60-piece Sea Cadet Band from HMCS Quadra in Comox.

Walkout Over Food

VANCOUVER (CP) — All work on British Columbia Hydro's Peace Canyon Dam near Hudson Hope shut down for the August holiday weekend 1½ days early after the 1,000 employees staged a walkout to protest the preparation of camp food.

The men quit work about noon Wednesday, and most left the dam site shortly thereafter in the wake of week-long suspicions that the 100 men who had become ill were victims of food poisoning.

Doctors have diagnozed the widespread sickness as viral influenza which has hit the northeastern B.C. communities of Hudson Hope and Fort St. John.

Union officials, management personnel and the field supervisor for the Vancouver-based catering firm that runs the camp kitchen met Thursday and ironed out employee complaints about food service.

Construction workers on the $450 million dam first reported illness July 26. A representative of the Fort St. John Health Unit investigated the complaints Tuesday and three doctors then diagnosed the high fever, dizziness and muscle cramps as flu which also has hit many persons not living or eating in the camp.

Following a general meeting Wednesday morning, however, the men agreed not to return to work, and by noon chartered buses, originally scheduled to pick the men up at work's end Thursday, had arrived to take them to their holiday destinations.

"It appears they were just looking for a longer weekend," a management spokesman said.

The men are expected to return to work Tuesday morning.

Since the camp opened in February, 1975, labor disputes, most of them jurisdictional, have cost about 30 working days.

Port Angeles Stopover

PORT ANGELES (AP) — The container ship Taiwan Phoenix was towed into port here Wednesday, en route to Seattle following a head-on collision last month about 1,000 kilometres south of Kodiak, Alaska.

Causeway Litter: The Profit Motif

Litter on the Inner Harbor Causeway may be shocking to some people but to Ald. Bill Tindall it smells a little bit like roses.

Tindall, chairman of city council's tourism committee, said Thursday he's heard plenty of complaints about the Causeway.

"But there's two sides to this, of course. It all depends on how you view it," he said.

"We have a mess because there's so many people down there enjoying the Causeway. If we didn't have the people, there'd be no mess.

"We spent an awful lot of money attracting people here — so let them make a mess. We'll clean it up."

He said the litter on the Causeway is a minor problem compared to the difficulties Victoria would be in if there were no tourists here to mess things up a little.

Council Sits on Fence On Neutron Bomb Ban

Victoria council's intergovernmental relations committee has wrestled with some weighty topics over the years but things got really heavy Thursday when they got into the neutron bomb issue.

Ald. Robin Blencoe wanted the committee to support a B.C. Peace Council resolution calling for the banning of the neutron bomb — but that sparked a battle with Ald. Murray Glazier.

Glazier moved that "council oppose the escalation of nuclear war and the killing of people and endorse international security."

Glazier said those were the really important matters — not neutron bombs.

"I'm not a military strategist; I don't know whether stopping production of this (neutron) weapon will achieve those ends."

Mayor Mike Young let that dispute rage for about two minutes and then cut off debate.

Young said the committee could endorse the B.C. Peace Council resolution, as have councils in Toronto and Vancouver, "but frankly this me-too-ism sickens me a little.".

Young said if council members are really concerned about the issue then maybe they could come up with a resolution of their own.

With that Glazier withdrew his resolution concerning war and peace and the committee voted not to ban the neutron bomb.

Plastic Yule Holly

The look will definitely be artificial this Christmas, Victoria's downtown economic development committee decided Thursday.

City hall purchasing agent H.V. Robinson is soon going shopping for the town's Christmas decorations and before he placed any orders committee chairman Ald. Bill Tindall wanted to know whether the holly should be natural or artificial.

A number of aldermen earlier this year expressed a hope the holly could be home grown — but in a report Robinson recommended against it.

He said real holly would turn black at the first exposure to frost, the leaves would tend to blow off and securing the holly to a frame would be expensive.

"It is also possible the real holly intertwined with the electric lamps could create a fire hazard," he said.

Tindall said on the basis of that council should opt for the artificial, and after a brief discussion the committee agreed.

Bus Drivers In Limbo

B.C. Hydro transit workers wondering about their future when the system becomes a municipal responsibility won't get any answers from Victoria city hall.

Ald. Ron McKenzie raised the transit worker problem at a meeting of council's intergovernmental committee Thursday.

"What is their status going to be?" asked McKenzie. "Who are they going to be working for and what will their relationship be with city employees?"

City manager Jim Bramley said he didn't know the answers to those and a lot of other questions about the B.C. Urban Transit Authority Act.

"There are problems," said Bramley, ". . . we don't know what their situation is going to be. We've got problems with our own contract in relating to B.C. Hydro contracts too."

Added Mayor Mike Young: "I know the (Hydro) employees are concerned because obviously when you have such mismanagement of a mass transit every aspect is going to have to be re-examined.".

But he said it is just too early for him to provide any answers.

Early Decision Promised On Quadra Highway Link

Highways Minister Alex Fraser has promised Saanich an early decision on the fate of a proposed highway link between the Patricia Bay Highway and North Quadra, which has been a bone of contention between the ministry and the municipality for several months.

Following a meeting with Fraser Thursday — a meeting he had been trying to arrange for four months — Couvelier said the minister assured him a reply would be forthcoming within three or four days.

Couvelier also said he believed he had been able to impress on Fraser the reasons for Saanich's objection to the highway connector.

"I left with the happy feeling that he at least understood what I was talking about," he said.

The highways planners in the ministry believe the future growth of Saanich and the Greater Victoria area will require an additional east-west artery, linking Roy Road, Vanalman and Beckwith-at-Quadra via an overpass spanning the Pat Bay Highway.

Eventually this would be extended in the west to Munns Road and the Trans-Canada Highway.

But Saanich maintains that the 80-foot right-of-way proposed is both unnecessary and a potential threat to residential areas in its path.

In the longer term, council members fear that after the east-west artery has reached Beckwith, on the western flank of the Blenkinsop Valley, there will be irresistible pressure to extend it further eastward in a damaging swath through the valley itself.

The conflict has resulted in a stalemate, with the ministry refusing to approve a major rezoning bylaw for the North Quadra area because Saanich had failed to provide planning protection for the right-of-way.

Couvelier said he tried in his meeting with Fraser to correct a fundamental misunderstanding which seems to prevail in the ministry.

"The technical people in the highways department seem to think that when we described the urban containment boundary as being sacrosanct we didn't really mean what we said.

"They envisage the Saanich of the future as border-to-border housing. Yet since the early 1960s council has been saying that all those areas lying outside the urban containment boundary will be forever greenbelt, and we will not violate that," he added.

Couvelier said he tried to convince Fraser and his associates that they should amend their classification of Saanich from urban to urban-rural.

Under that planning philosophy, the municipality would need major roads not on a one-mile grid pattern but a two-mile pattern.

He said he pointed out that there are already cross-Saanich routes at Royal Oak Avenue, Quadra and McKenzie, and argued that no more were necessary.

He also tried to persuade them to divert the $1 million that would be needed for the proposed Vanalman crossing to upgrading the Quadra overpass to a full-diamond layout.

Religion Still Too Touchy For Television

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Of all the touchy subjects tackled by television, probably the most difficult and least successful have dealt with religion.

Violence, sex and politics, as the basis of weekly prime time series, have met with varying degrees of acceptance when treated as drama or comedy.

But clergymen as TV heroes have failed with even greater consistency than newspapermen. Denomination makes hardly any difference.

There were heavy religious overtones to "Bridget Loves Bernie," a story of a Catholic bride and a Jewish groom and their families. Members of both faiths objected to the series.

"The Flying Nun" enjoyed a brief popularity, but it was essentially a kid's show with the gimmick of a nun soaring around like Superman.

George Kennedy bombed out playing a tough priest in "Sarge." "Christopher's Flock," based on the story of Presbyterian minister Donn Moomaw, failed to stir the nation's viewers.

'Hot' Romance For Andy, Marie

By DICK MAURICE

Is there a "hot" romance going on between Andy Gibb and Marie Osmond? Andy Gibb met Marie Osmond when he taped a "Donny and Marie" show, and the Bee Gees' kid brother was instantly taken by her beauty.

Though he insists, "We just became friends after I did their TV show," reputable sources allege that Andy had a full-scale crush on pretty Marie and was just dying to date her.

Andy called Marie at the highly protected Osmond compound regularly, and finally won a few dates. However, he was given to understand that nothing serious could occur, as he was a married man, separated from his wife who lives in Australia with their child and even more important, not a Mormon.

Apparently, Marie thought Andy was pretty "cute," and because she was feeling kind of lonely in the wake of Donny's marriage, wouldn't have minded being Andy's "everything."

However, the Osmond family did everything to put out the flame, including giving Andy the cold shoulder.

A recent inquiry to the State Department as to why Paul Newman was appointed as a delegate to the United Nations special session on disarmament brought the response that Paul was selected because of his high level of recognition throughout the world and his well-known long-standing commitment to humanitarian goals.

We also learned Paul had originally turned down the State Department's request because he was concerned the five-week schedule would conflict with previous commitments he made to race cars in competitions. However, Paul was assured that the disarmament conference would not require all his attention 24 hours a day, seven days a week, and he, like any good American, accepted.

Bill Bixby has been on the television screen for years with "My Favorite Martian," "The Courtship of Eddie's Father" and "The Magician." Now he's jumped out of the pages of Marvel comic books and onto the screen as "The Incredible Hulk."

Although the Hulk started life as a comic book character, Bixby's view of him is far from funny. If you've seen the show, then you know that the Hulk is actually a research scientist who is transformed into a raging creature whenever he becomes angry—a result of a scientific endeavor that misfired. Bixby feels that this is a very serious and adult-level idea.

He explains, "It deals with an interesting problem and that is anger, which manifests itself in the creature. Karl Jung would have adored this. It deals with the various forms of one's personality, exposing it for all the things it can be."

Imagine what would happen if everyone turned into a Hulk every time he got angry! That sobering thought leads Bixby to believe that "The Incredible Hulk," despite its comic-fantasy name, is an important idea for television to deal with. He refers to the show as adult television which children can watch and enjoy instead of a childish show which adults are forced to watch.

The world's funniest lady, Lucille Ball, is planning to do her first dramatic special for "Hallmark Hall of Fame." Lucy will play a woman named Aunt Mary who has devoted her life to working with underprivileged children.

Based on an unpublished article, the teleplay, titled "Aunt Mary Hits A Home Run," deals with the lady's efforts to give directionless kids some sort of foundation for living.

This is just the sort of challenge Lucy has been looking for. Aunt Mary is a formidable 78-year-old woman who overcame her own handicap as an amputee to coach kids to the baseball big leagues.

SOAP OPERA SCENE

Target for Disaster

By JOHN GOUDAS and STEVEN SCHEUER

It certainly doesn't pay to be a big shot on "Days of Our Lives." Lawyer Don Craig (Jed Allen), a recent candidate for state Senate, tumbled off a ledge attempting to rescue teenager Donna, who claimed to be his daughter. While recuperating, Craig suffered a relapse. Miracle drugs snatched Craig away from death's door, only to leave the man stone deaf, at least temporarily.

Now, wealthy manufacturer Bob Anderson (Mark Tapscott) appears to be the next target for disaster! Anderson hasn't been in tip-top shape for quite a spell, suffering bouts of dizziness and heart pain. Still, he managed to marry sexy, conniving Linda Phillips (Margaret Mason) this spring without keeling over at the altar . . . but the executive remain a marked man. A new house picked out by the bride just burned to the ground, and those heart pains continue, building in intensity. As any fan can plainly see, Bob Anderson is being set up for trying times ahead.

If the Anderson ticker fails to create sufficient trauma, you can be sure his new wife, Linda, will take up the slack, either trampling over employees at the company, or dallying with new bedmates such as alcoholic Neil, or Julie's long-lost brother, Steve . . . ne'er-do-well Steve displays an irresistible urge to steal. On a temporary winning streak, Linda should be child's play for Steve, a pretty amateur hustler way out of her league.

As fans see Bob Anderson grimace with chest pains on the show, they are watching an actor who knows what heart attacks are all about. This spring, out playing a round of golf with producer Jack Herzberg, Mark Tapscott suddenly bent double with acute chest pains. Luckily, Tapscott's attack proved to be minor. He was back at work within weeks. Given the green light by medics, Tapscott continues to play a key role on the show. Tapscott doesn't like to dwell on his unfortunate infirmity but he hasn't tried to hide it either. He hopes his rapid recovery will serve as an inspiration to others who have experienced heart attacks and are terrified of returning to their normal routines. So keep an eye on Tapscott, here's a man who has been there in real life.

CHANNEL CHATTER — "Love of Life's" Corinne Neuchateau (she plays Mary Jane Owens) will be off to France on holiday shortly to visit her relatives. While she's there, Corinne might tune in the French soap operas and compare the plot lines with ours. If the French reputation holds true, their soaps will be a lot racier. Instead of talking about sex, they're probably practicing what we preach . . . Michael Zaslow (he's Roger Thorpe in "Guiding Light") has only been back in his starring role since May but he's already planning other career activities in addition to his role in the soap. He'll be heading to East Haddam, Conn., and the Goodspeed Opera in late August to star in "She Loves Me," a charming musical comedy . . . Other vacationing soap opera actors include Stefan Schnabel (Dr. Stephen Jackson in "Guiding Light"), who is in Italy where he maintains a home near Lake Como. Stefan's expected back in mid-August, after indulging in his favorite hobbies, sailing and mountain climbing. Also vacationing during August from the "Guiding Light" cast will be Christopher Bernau (he's Alan Spaulding); Barbara Berjer (she plays Barbara Norris Thorpe) and Mart Hulswit (Dr. Ed Bauer) . . . John Aniston (the popular Eddie Aleata in "Love of Life") and the show's hair stylist Nick Troiano are part of a group of partners who will open a new restaurant located across the street from the CBS-TV studios in New York City where "Love of Life" and other soaps are taped.

PLOT PORTENTS — Is Jill, a lady who always ends up on the losing side, going to hurt her hard-working Mom by spending time with widower Stuart Brooks on "The Young and the Restless"? Greg's growing fond of Linda despite friendly advice from Snapper. If pregnant Leslie and Lucas pair off for the sake of Leslie's condition, why not keep more sparks flying with a romance between Snapper and Dr. Casey Reed?

No doubt about it, the number one trouble-maker on "Days of Our Lives" this summer is Julie's long-lost brother, Steve, a light-fingered man when it comes to rifling the green. Now that Don's deafness appears to be temporary, perhaps the lawyer and Marlena will be hitched quickly. Meanwhile, Linda pushes her weight around, having gained social position at last.

Blind Mike Karr puts himself in mortal danger when he is lured out of the house on a phoney tip in "Edge of Night."

Jill's attempt at another reconciliation with Frank is thwarted once again by Rae with a very nasty twist in "Ryan's Hope." Delia and Roger finally overcome the obstacles and find time for romance with a capital "R".

Benny and Estelle finally find each other in "All My Children" but is it too late? Caroline and Frank are having marital problems and Devon is gaining weight — what does it imply?

On "One Life to Live," Peter and Melinda's marriage literally turns to ashes — she burns up their marriage certificate. Karen is plagued by the private detective Dorian has hired and Brad is released from jail. Luke also gains his freedom.

Meg suffers a heart attack in "High Hopes" but not before Helen makes a clean breast of things. Marie tells Neal that she is responsible for her father's death and Jessie has a strange reaction to Meg's heart seizure.

John Hearn's Collectibles

Mrs. Cotton of London, Ontario asks me to recommend a book about miniature sewing machines.

I very much doubt if such a book exists; it is too specialized a field. I know there is something in a book called The Wonderful World of Toys, Games and Dolls, published in the U.S. in 1971 and it is that kind of book you would have to go to for information on this subject.

In fact, miniature sewing machines are the most delightful of collectibles. Some of them date back to the 1890s and they went on being made right up to World War II. Strictly speaking they were not toys since they worked and were sold so that little girls could make their own doll clothes. Mostly they were around 6" high and would weigh 2-3 lbs. — in other words, they were quite substantial. The line should be drawn here between miniature sewing machine and toy sewing machines; the latter were made to be played with and the former to be used. They were made, not by toy manufacturers but by the great sewing machine companies — Singer among them. Like the parent models, they were made to last, which is one of the reasons they are popular today.

A tip for those who will now search the attic for the miniature sewing machine they are sure they left up there forty years ago, look for the accessories — bobbins, needles and tiny spools of thread; these are extremely rare.

Here is a group answer to a number of questions received recently about furniture — some definitions.

A chiffonier is a chest of drawers with a mirror attached. It was used as a place to keep chiffon, ribbons or lace.

A tester is the canopy over a four-poster bed. When it extends from the headboard like an awning it is known as a half-tester.

Ormolu is an alloy of copper, zinc and tin which looks very much like gold. It is used in furniture, architectural ornamentation and jewelery. Sometimes it is called mosaic gold.

Empire refers to furniture made in imitation of the Greek and Roman style. It was popular during the Napoleonic era in Europe and between 1815 and 1840 in the U.S.

Chinoiserie is anything made in imitation of the Chinese style — but not actually in China.

A cartouche is the shape made by laying an oval on top of a rectangle.

Art Nouveau which was popular around 1890-1910 revels in swirling, sinuous designs based on vines and other natural forms.

Art Deco followed and this was based on mathematical shapes. It was popular in Europe in the 20s.

A caryatid is a column carved in the shape of a female figure.

Looking at Stars

Flip Wilson is about to enter into a partnership with his 15-year-old son, joining forces for a new TV show.

It could be a variety show since father and son are presently taking dancing lessons together and, despite the age difference, Flip has neither faltered nor failed to stick to the rugged rehearsal regimen. Always the comedian, however, Flip has laughingly labelled his unique two-step the "Flip-Flop!"

Ali McGraw has just returned from Japan where she went to promote her new film, which also stars Kris Kristofferson, entitled "Convoy."

When asked how she got along with her co-star, she answered, "There is no doubt who the star of this movie is — the trucks!"

"Our director had the most incredible way of making machinery come alive. Kris and I have made an addition to the old saying, 'You can't upstage children, animals or trucks.'"

Great Performances Airs Double Bill

On Sunday, August 6, Public TV 9 airs a double bill of Great Performances highlighting works of Tchaikovsky and Chopin.

Saluting the composer's sweeping romantic scores, Leonard Bernstein and the New York Philharmonic present an all-Tchaikovsky concert at 3 p.m. Bernstein's interpretation of "Symphony No. 4 in F Minor, Opus 36" opens the performance. Tchaikovsky's piece originally was dedicated to Nadezhda van Meck, a widow with whom he carried on a great deal of correspondence for 13 years. They never met, bound by the rigid social conventions of their time. The composer saw the symphony itself as an exploration of fate: fate which "prevents our hopes being realized."

Bernstein also presents his renowned arrangement of the "Andante Cantabile" from Tchaikovsky's "String Quartet, Opus 11."

Following at 4 p.m., in a special television appearance taped when he was 89-years-young, Arthur Rubinstein performs selections of Frederic Chopin. The Polish piano genius is featured in "Concerto for Piano and Orchestra in F Minor" and "Scherzo in B Flat Minor, Opus 21." Andre Previn and the London Symphony Orchestra accompany the master.

Rubinstein also performs Schubert's "Impromptu No. 4 in A Flat Major, Opus 90" and Brahms' "Intermezzo No. 2 in B Flat Minor, Opus 117."

Great Performances is a presentation of WNET/New York made possible by a grant from Exxon and Public Television Stations. Local acquisition and broadcast of the series is funded by Pacific Northwest Bell.

His Hobby Stamps Him

Millions of television viewers know Sal Viscuso as Father Timothy Flotsky, the young priest in the ABC Television Network's comedy series, "Soap." His wife, Tess, a painter and illustrator, thinks of him as the Mad Hatter.

As a birthday present, Tess had a rubber stamp made for him, based on Tenniel's etching of the quirky "Alice in Wonderland" character. Sal signs his letters with it.

The Mad Hatter is only one of the more than 150 rubber stamps with which Sal creates graphic messages on letters, invitations, menus (for his famous Italian dinners) and special occasion cards. There's a wild variety of images — from pirates to potentates, camels to cockroaches, apes to apples, lions to ladybugs. When Sal occasionally has to use a word or two to make his meaning clear, he has a choice of five alphabets.

Sal became interested in collecting and using rubber stamps about five years ago. "I'd get these rubber-stamp letters from my friend Jock Reynolds, a sculptor in San Francisco. Pretty soon I got to thinking, 'Hey, I'd like to put together letters like these.' It's natural, I guess. I'm an actor, I like to entertain. And these stamps make letters entertaining. So I started collecting."

Friends tell Sal his letters themselves become collector's items. His envelopes are equally vivid, and his local post office displays Xeroxed copies of some of them on the bulletin board.

Sal says there's a growing counter-culture of rubber-stamp collectors. He gets catalogs from a half-dozen firms. Prices usually range from $2 to $7. And of course there are swap meets for the aficionados. "It's contagious," Sal says. "I get wild letters now from eight of my friends who've taken it up."

So far, Sal has been unable to find a stamp with the image he wants the most — a bar of soap. Apparently, it would have to be specially designed and made. Sal has dropped some heavy hints to his artist wife.

After all, he does have a birthday coming up.

Albert Herring On Opera Theatre

Opera Theatre of St. Louis performs the world television premiere of Benjamin Britten's "Albert Herring" on Public TV 9's OPERA THEATRE Thursday, August 10, at 8:30 p.m.

"Albert Herring" is Britten's operatic spoof on Victorian morality. Based on one of Guy de Maupassant's lesser-known short stories, "Le Rosier de Mme. Husson," and with a libretto by Eric Crozier, the outrageous events of this razor-sharp satire centre around the annual crowning of the Queen of May during the spring of 1900 in Loxford, a mythical village in East Suffolk, England.

Since not one "virtuous" village lass can be found to qualify, the sheltered Albert Herring is chosen to become the King of the May. A spiked lemonade, however, soon emancipates the shy lad. Sparked by false courage, Albert goes in search of himself and survives with a life transformed and made better.

Joining Hoback in the opera are Pauline Tinsley (Lady Billows); David Ward (Police Superintendent Budd); Stephen Dickson (Sid); Evelyn Petros (Nancy); Mallory Walker (Mr. Upfold); Joyce Gerber (Florence Pike); Elizabeth Pruett (Miss Wadsworth); and Judith Christin (Mrs. Herring).

IT'S ALWAYS HARD to get a taxi in downtown Brooklyn, but Barbra Streisand still manages to find transportation — with a police escort — in "For Pete's Sake," a zany comedy which has an encore showing on the ABC Television Network's "The ABC Summer Movie," Thursday, August 10 at 9:30 p.m.

Spotlight on Movies

A Cry in the Wilderness, on 8 at 12:30 p.m. Drama made for television about a trapper-farmer who has to put up with a rabid skunk's bite and a flood. George Kennedy and Joanna Pettet (1974).

Marriage—Italian Style, on 11 at 1 p.m. Italian-made comedy starring Sophia Loren and Marcello Mastroianni. The story is about a happy prostitute and her efforts to trick a wealthy businessman into marriage—and then to hold on to him (1964).

Riding High, on 5 at 3 p.m. A racing story starring Bing Crosby and Coleen Gray. The film was based on Frank Capra's Broadway Bill, and it was tailored for Crosby (1950).

For Pete's Sake, on 4 at 9 p.m. Comedy starring Barbra Streisand as a Brooklyn housewife who tries to finance her cab-driving husband's education. An uneven attempt at screwball comedy, also starring Michael Sarrazin and Estelle Parsons (1974).

One Brief Summer, on 8 at 12:10 a.m. British-made drama set on a country estate, about a girl's opposition to a marriage between her father and her friend. Felicity Gibson and Clifford Evans (1967).

The Wild Eye, on 6 at 12:30 a.m. Italian-made drama about a documentary filmmaker, Philippe Leroy, who records people's suffering (1967).

Let No Man Write My Epitaph, on 7 at 1:40 a.m. Poorly done sequel to Knock on Any Door, starring Burl Ives, Shelley Winters and James Darren. The story is about dope addiction on Chicago's South Side (1960).

Today's Highlights

Here Comes the Future, on 8 at 9 p.m. Paris: the Belly and the Heart, a program produced in 1972, shows how modernization is changing Paris—how huge buildings now dwarf national landmarks, markets and art studios, and how entire old districts on the Seine's banks are being replaced or renovated.

Cinema: B.C., on 9 at 1:30 p.m. Broncobuster Kenny McLean follows the rodeo circuit from Texas to Calgary in this second part of Hard Rider.

Still Touchy for TV

new ground with "All In The Family" (bigotry), "Mary Hartman, Mary Hartman" (sex) and "All's Fair" (politics), is tackling religion this season with a priest as the protagonist of "In The Beginning" for CBS.

Father James M. Cleary, a fund-raising Roman Catholic, country club type who drives a Cadillac, finds himself assigned to a ghetto parish with a street-wise nun and that is where the fun and drama come in.

McLean Stevenson, best known for his role as Col. Henry Blake in the "M-A-S-H" series for three seasons, will star as Father Cleary. Stevenson is well aware of the prickly nature of the show but is confident it will succeed.

"We're not doing a Bing Crosby 'Going My Way' show or anything like it," Stevenson said the other day. "We're combining comedy and social comment. I'd define our show as comedy-drama, not situation comedy.

"I'll be wearing the Roman collar off and on during the course of the show as Father Cleary makes his rounds. We've made him a human being, not a saintly individual. He makes mistakes, a lot of them.

"Father Cleary and Colonel Blake have a lot in common. They are both nice guys who run afoul of circumstances that often are beyond their capabilities.

"The show hits issues head on, including drugs and sex, marriage and divorce. One segment even has a priest and a nun falling in love and getting married."

Stevenson, who was reared a Catholic as a youth, says the church was dubious about "In The Beginning" when word got out Lear was going to do the series.

To allay qualms the pilot show was shown to Catholic audiences, including many priests and nuns, at Notre Dame, Catholic University, Loyola and other schools.

According to Stevenson, the show won overwhelming approval of the priests and others in the Catholic hierarchy.

"The series is really about people, not Catholicism," Stevenson said. "Father Cleary is a conservative priest who finds himself in conflict with a young, liberal nun with whom he must work closely in the ghetto. Pricilla Lopez plays the nun who grew up in the ghetto as a member of a street gang.

"We will be doing shows on issues that confront non-Catholics as well as Catholics. But the bottom line is that the show is funny, funny, funny."

Stevenson quit "M-A-S-H" three years ago, seeking more responsibility in a show of his own. Despite a projected variety series that never materialized and an unsuccessful 15-week sitcom, "The McLean Stevenson Show," Stevenson has no regrets about departing the high flying "M-A-S-H."

"I had no place to go when I left 'M-A-S-H,'" he said. "NBC was renegotiating Johnny Carson's contract and thought they might need a replacement. I was one of three guys they considered.

The others were John Davidson and Bob Newhart.

"During my three years at NBC I went through three vice presidents in charge of programming. It convinced me that network executives are temporary employees who make permanent decisions.

"They weren't to quick to realize prime time shows have changed in the past 10 years. It's not enough anymore to take a star like Doris Day or Fred MacMurray and build a show around them. I was a regular on Doris' show and I know.

"The single star or two-star show is over for episodic TV. You have to build an ensemble as Norman Lear has done with his other shows. The real star of any series today is the writing.

"We have at least six regulars in our new series and there may be a couple of added starters to the cast as well. They will all be strong, distinct characters that viewers can identify with.

"The priests and nuns provide different characters than have been seen on the tube before. Our show is unique, funny and controversial, but that doesn't mean it will be a success.

"Viewers will have to like the characters if we hope to succeed. I have a feeling they will. I certainly hope so anyhow."

Always popular Split-Entry Design

The always popular split entry design provides for maximum convenience and most logical usage of available space. This design offers these advantages, and the additional plus factor of startling dramatic exterior design. The white stucco and dark-stained accent boards combine well with the brick chimney and heavy cedar shake roof — and the diamond-paned windows provide the finishing touch of authenticity.

The historic-toned, doubl-doored entry leads into a compact entrance foyer, up to the main living area or down to the family room and recreational complex.

The large living-dining room combination features a centrally-position fireplace for conviviality when entertaining. The dining room separates from the nook via pocket door for convenient division of casual family meals and formal dining.

The logically-planned, U-shaped kitchen separates from the nook via convenient snack bar counter, thus allowing a variety of design possibilities.

All three bedrooms are positioned around the central bath and linen storage area and away from the main entertaining area of the home. Each has good lighting and generous closet storage. The master has a two-piece ensuite with a window for soft morning light.

On the lower level, a second fireplace in the recreation-family room, laundry-utility complex and space for the future development of additional bedrooms.

An attractive and practical design guaranteed to be a welcome addition to any urban neighbourhood.

Plans for design No. 70-1299 may be purhased either by single set, at a cost of $70. for the first set and $10. for each additional set, or by the package. TV MAILBAG

By THOM MEAD

HOLLYWOOD — The TV Mailbag:

Q. Please settle a slight disagreement I'm having with my sister. I say the Robert Conrad of "Black Sheep Squadron" did all of the stunts on the old series, "Wild, Wild West." My sister says I'm wrong and that all the stunts were performed by regular stuntmen. Who's right? — F.P., Old Bridge, N.J.

A. You both are correct. Conrad, like many other actors who are athletically oriented, does many of the stunts, both in "Black Sheep" and "Wild, Wild West." However, really dangerous stunts are done by professional stuntmen. The reason is many television and movie studios don't want their stars to risk injuries.

Q. Why doesn't "Wonder Woman" have a regular channel? — S.W., San Francisco.

A. The original "Wonder Woman" series began on ABC a year and a half ago as a mid-season replacement. ABC subsequently canceled the program because of declining ratings. CBS then picked up the show and renamed it "The New Adventures of Wonder Woman." It has been playing on Friday nights. CBS liked the show so much that it has been renewed for another season and will appear this fall in its regular spot, 8 p.m. on Fridays.

Q. On many shows that deal with medicine, particularly "Emergency," you see the letters FACS next to the doctor's names. What do these words stand for? — M.G. Findlay, Ohio.

A. They stand for Fellows of the American College of Surgeons (FACS).

Q. I've been a regular viewer of "All in the Family," but I still can't understand the next to the last line of the show's theme song "Those Were the Days." How about some help? — H.L., Harrisville, Penn.

A. It goes like this: "Gee, our old La Salle (a car long since out of production) ran great, those were the days."

Q. While watching a recent episode of "The Incredible Hulk," I swear I saw Sherry Jackson, who I believe was a regular on the "Danny Thomas Show" during the early 1950s. Am I correct? — R. E., Kamloops, B.C.

A. That was Sherry Jackson. She was one of three children, Rusty Hamer and Angela Cartwright being the others, of Danny Thomas in the series "Make Room for Daddy," which appeared on ABC between 1953 and 1956.

Q. Stephen Boyd was always one of my favorite actors but I understand he has passed away. What were the circumstances surrounding his death? — B.P.L., Newark, Calif.

A. Boyd suffered a fatal heart attack while playing golf on a Southern California course on June 2, 1977. He was 49 when he died.

Q. Could you tell me who won the rating war during the past television season? — S.A., Cold Springs, N.Y.

A. ABC was the frontrunning network in the rating game this year. CBS came in second and NBC trailed poorly in last place.

Questions of general interest will be answered in the column. Volume of mail prohibits personal replies. Inquiries should be sent to Thom Mead, TV Mailbag, c/o Revue, Box 300, Victoria, B.C. V8W 2N4.

The Loneliest People of All

By LESLIE DREW

Apart from railway porters who came and went with trains on the Kettle Valley line, I can remember only one Black in the small B.C. interior town where I grew up. One saw her occasionally, trudging along dusty streets to a home somewhere on the outskirts. No one seemed to know where she worked or where she lived. Even to a child, she seemed a terribly solitary soul.

The loneliness of the Blacks who have settled in this province is one of many unfortunate aspects of their lives brought out in Go Do Some Great Thing, and while it may be said that this has been the fate of very small minorities everywhere, by comparison with other minorities in B.C. the Blacks seem to have been the loneliest of all. The Chinese had Chinatown. The Blacks just lived in the shadows on the edge of town.

Loneliness was one thing. Discrimination was something else, and it pursued them from the moment they first arrived from California during the gold rush of 1858. That migration of 600, who moved to the crown colony of Vancouver Island and the goldfields of the mainland, promised a better life than the violence and legalized injustice of San Francisco. They had come at the invitation of no less a person, it seems, than Governor James Douglas, whose mother was a Creole. Douglas, ever shrewd, knew that the colony needed hard-working settlers who would be loyal to Britain, and since Blacks in the U.S., even free ones, had no hopes of American citizenship at the time, they were eminently-suitable candidates; their lot could only improve.

A good many of them did well in their adopted land. They worked like Blacks, in the old, almost-forgotten phrase, and more than a few became prosperous merchants and tradesmen, restaurant owners and saloon keepers. They even policed Victoria for a short time.

Religious, resourceful and ambitious, generous in giving to public causes, they proved on the whole to be steadier and thrifter than many whites — and this, sadly, was the source of much of the discrimination to which they were subjected. The forms that discrimination took are enunciated carefully by the author. While they were not persecuted to the same extent as Blacks in California, and while the Chinese suffered worse, and though they stood up for their rights valiantly, they were too few ever to have much political clout. And it was politically that they were dealt the dirtiest tricks.

The outstanding Black was Mifflin Gibbs, a born leader who fought ceaselessly for his peoples' rights here, eventually won election to Victoria city council in his home ward of James Bay in 1866, returned to the U.S. well-to-do, took up law, became the first black man in the U.S. to be elected a municipal judge, and in old age became U.S. consul in Madagascar. Yet Gibbs was barred from the Douglas retirement banquet and from a public-subscription banquet for Queen Victoria's birthday on grounds that the colony's American residents wouldn't appreciate his attendance. That was just one of many insults.

After the gold rush boom many returned to the U.S., others stayed, some to farm on Salt Spring Island, where their descendants live to this day. The author chronicles their lives well. He could have cut down on lengthy newspaper accounts and delved more into their social environment, but his problem is an obvious one — lack of first-hand information at this late date.

This book is one that deserved to be written, and it makes fascinating reading, mostly about what the Blacks did for B.C. and what the whites didn't do for them.

Convictions Stronger than His Humanity

By JULIAN REID

Twenty-odd years ago, psychiatrist Thomas Szasz published The Myth of Mental Illness, the book that established him as the most outspokenly heretical critic of his profession yet to appear on this hyper-psychiatrized continent. In it he spelled out the single devastating thesis that has provided the substance for a dozen well-publicized sequels: that modern psychotherapeutic theory and practice constitute a subtly repressive "ideology of intolerance" — a kind of present-day equivalent of the infamous Spanish Inquisition — characterized by "an insidious and pervasive conflation of disease with deviance, illness with immorality, cure with control, treatment with torture."

His ongoing battle against the entrenched high priesthood of the psychiatric establishment, along with his uncompromising insistence on the legal and moral rights of mental patients, have established Szasz as one of the pre-eminent civil libertarians of our time. Unyieldingly persuaded of the rightness of his cause, he marshals his documentation and arguments like so many battering-rams. But in addition to being a forceful logic-chopper, he is also a waspishly witty satirist, whose tartly acidulous rhetoric flows from a pen dipped in purest vitriol.

And yet this very rhetorical strength is also his besetting weakness, at least insofar as his humanitarianism is concerned. For, like so many social crusaders, Szasz is much stronger in self-righteous conviction than he is in simple humanity.

Thus the psychologically disturbed unfortunate, on whose behalf Szasz is waging his private war, will be disappointed if he turns to his defender's pages in search of compassion, or healing sympathy for his plight. And he may well find himself wondering just what might become of him personally if Szasz should ever succeed in his self-appointed task of scourging all today's self-styled "mental health professionals" out of the therapeutic temple. For who will be left to succor the hapless sufferer once they are gone?

Indeed, persuasive as the case he builds is, it is difficult not to feel that Szasz has been guilty of throwing the baby out with the bath-water. For though his criticisms may be wholly warranted, the fact remains that the psychiatric establishment is presently filling a vital need in our society — if only by a kind of mass default. And up until now, for all his voluminous writings, Szasz has had little if anything to offer by way of a viable alternative.

The chief significance of his new book, The Myth of Psychotherapy, is that it goes a fair way toward righting this imbalance — and, in the process, casts into high relief both the strengths and the weaknesses of its author's reiterated position. As the title indicates, this volume is a direct sequel to the original The Myth of Mental Illness, rounding off the arguments that were initially adumbrated there. However, its focus is no longer on the theoretical concepts in terms of which the psychiatric profession is accustomed to justify its behavior, but on the more practically oriented "psychotherapeutic" interventions by means of which they set about "curing" the alleged illnesses of their patients.

It is hardly surprising, then, that Szasz begins by asserting bluntly that, "like mental illness, psychotherapy is a metaphor and a myth" — and nothing more. For if, after all, psychic disturbances are not really "illnesses" at all, as he has already argued at somewhat daunting length, then it follows inexorably that they cannot be susceptible to medical treatment and cure. Therefore the whole notion of "therapy" in this sphere is necessarily a snare and a delusion.

Fresher and much more telling is Szasz's lengthy historical exegisis of the origins and development of this delusion. The present-day concept of the "cure" of minds, he demonstrates, is merely a degraded and cripplingly distorted updating of the old-fashioned notion of "the cure of souls," which up to this century was generally recognized as the proper province not of medicine but of religion.

How the original quasi-medical metaphor of soul-sickness and pastoral "cure" was literalized by the pioneering alienists into an oppressivly pseudo-scientific dogma is traced out by Srasz in illuminatingly well-documented detail. Predictably, the chief villain of the piece turns out to be Sigmund Freud, whom Szasz subjects to so much rhetorical vitriol that it tends to undermine his argument rather than advance it. Here he shows himself at his unappealing worst — choleric, carping, and above all manifestly unfair.

Less predictably, the hero of the story turns out to be Carl Gustav Jung — though Szasz does not forebear from flinging a few wayward barbs in his direction as well. For Jung, after all, possessed the rare perceptiveness to recognize "mental illness" for what it is: a fundamentally religious manifestation rather than a merely medical one.

Moreover, he possessed the even rarer courage to argue that the key factors in its cure were moral and metaphysical ones, rather than Freud's couch-bound confessionals or the endless doses of mind-dulling tranquillizers prescribed by his more physiologically-oriented successors.

Yet it is uncomfortably plain that Szasz pays tribute to Jung less out of heartfelt conviction than out of a cold-bloodedly intellectual apprehension that, if tribute is due anywhere, it surely must be due here. For even the most cursory of comparisons makes it painfully clear that the difference between their positions are far more profound and deep-rooted than their superficial similarities.

Above all Jung was an authentically religious man, rich in the spiritual virtues of compassion and humility — and it was from the soil of this intense humanity that his enduring insights sprang. Szasz, by contrast, is a decidedly secular figure, a sharp-tongued and spiteful moralist and social reformer who is markedly lacking in compassion, not to mention the other ennobling facets of Jung's deep spirituality.

And the inevitable result is that Szasz's espousal of religious values in preference to orthodox psychiatric dogma seems decidedly lacking in conviction when set alongside Jung's. It smacks more of rhetorical opportunism than anything else.

Which is a pity, because it tends to vitiate much of the ethical force of what, I believe, is a fundamentally valid thesis.

Jules Verne as Prophet

Since 1978 marks the 150th anniversary of Jules Verne's birth, it seems only fitting that the year should be marked by the publication of a brand-new biography of the great French fantasist.

Peter Costello's Jules Verne: Inventor of Science Fiction is, by my count, the 11th such study to appear in English. But only one of its predecessors brooks serious comparison, and that is the warmly sympathetic 1973 tribute by Verne's grandson, Jean Jules-Verne, reincarnated in a somewhat abridged British adaptation in 1976. With some justice, Costello stigmatizes that admiringly affectionate account as "reticent" — but, nevertheless, it is characterized by a refined judiciousnes and a very Gallic charm that are rather less in evidence in his own pages.

Thus, while Costello has some fresh revelations to offer regarding Verne's bohemian youth, his none-too-scandalous love-life, and the circumstances surrounding the posthumous publications of his last novels, it is to Jean Jules-Verne that the reader who simply seeks a sympathetically insightful account of the author and his achievements would be better advised to turn. Moreover, the Frenchman displays much deeper insight into his grandfather's social and literary milieux than does the foreign upstart who has only recently trespassed on to this territory.

The distinguishing virtue of Costello's book, on the other hand, lies in the well-informed skill with which he relates Verne's literary imaginings to the prevailing scientific and science-fictional preoccupations of his day. This makes his study essential reading for anyone seriously concerned with the history of science fiction — or with that of the modern imagination at large.

* * *

For, as Costello demonstrates, Jules Verne was no mere wide-eyed romancer, but a serious prophet as well. And there is more than a little justice in his fulsomely telling prefatory tribute: "In Verne's nineteenth-century novels, the twentieth century first came into being." — J.R.

His Wit Gets in Way of Feeling

WALT KELLYTHORNE

The 18 stories collected in Protective Footwear were written over a span of 15 years (1962-1977), and are as suitable an introduction as any to the work of someone the jacket blurb assures us is one of "the foremost writers in Canada."

Obviously, George Bowering can write:

"In Vancouver the warm winter made it easy to walk around and wait for buses. The sky was cloudy, but low and familiar. The streets were straight, and there was nothing easier than getting around town in winter under the edge of the Pacific sky. The climate makes the outside layer of the skin soft. When it rains it rains for several days. The first day is for going into a selfish depression that can be carried, nurtured and developed for the following days of stepping through puddles, hands in raincoat pockets, face down under the dripping awnings. Either way, rain or no rain, it is gratifying weather . . ."

Anyone who knows Vancouver as well as Bowering does will recognize immediately the aptness of his description of that open, rainsoaked city — and of the peculiar pathology endemic to its winter inhabitants. And surely only a true aficionado of west coast weather could call it "gratifying"! — but the adjective is perfect.

Unfortunately, such perfection is more often than not missing in these stories.

Bowering's style, of course, has been greatly influenced by certain American writers — Creeley and Barthelme are most often recognizable in this collection — whose hallmark seems to be a deliberate obfuscation of just what, if anything, is going on in the story: character, relationship and emotion become less important than what may be charitably called wit, more accurately called ego.

As Ebbe Coutts, the "hero" of the story "The House On Tenth", accurately remarks to the narrator, "Your wit interferes with your feeling."

Throughout the author's or narrator's voice — they are often the same, with little or no pretence at difference — intrudes with asides, predictions and irrelevancies that serve only to further confuse whatever motion the story may possess.

As the narrator of "Spans" informs us, "I indulge myself at your expense, though you may attempt to make it mine."

BOWERING . . . indulges himself at our expense

Of course, if we do, our effort is bound to be entirely futile, such control having been deliberately set beyond our power.

At best such evasiveness and intrusion are mildly interesting, attractive for their momentary promise of fun; at worst they become boring, the effort to penetrate the maze an unrewarding exercise in eyestrain and anger.

Another disturbing feature of these stories, and one that again is representative of the general trend of most recent American (and Canadian) fiction, is the casually sexist portrayal of women as men's handmaidens.

Bowering's few women characters clean ashtrays, supply fresh laundry, follow their men to utterly uninteresting reunions and, in a "Short Hagiography of Old Quebec", gratefully accept their rape — not knowing, of course, that that was just what they, the women, needed all along.

Given the nature of many of the stories in this collection — semi-mythic reminiscences of post-adolescent male ego fantasies (in one of which the object of the narrator's desire responds to a woman's telling comment on his sexual prowess "by hitting her in the face") — the rape in the "Quebec" story is inevitable, and one that recurs too often in life to possess even the vestiges of humor.

Happily, Bowering's talents are not entirely absent in these stories. "The Lawnmower" is a hilarious rendering of a dilemma we've all encountered as consumers; and "The White Coffin" is an eerie account of one man's appointment with death. Both stories are written in a clear, direct style that shows Bowering can — if he chooses — communicate with a simple honesty that is far more effective than the maundering voice he usually adopts.

For some, this collection will enhance its author's already sizable reputation; for others, it will only confirm that his genuine voice has still to sound.

Whatever its faults, Protective Footwear is a stimulating collection of stories, not to be missed by anyone interested in contemporary Canadian fiction.

E. D. WARD-HARRIS

There always seems room For another Nelson biography

The appearance of Nelson, by David Walder, raises the question as to whether we really need yet another biography of the famous naval hero. After all, nothing new has come to light since 1948 when Carola Oman, who was the first writer to gain access to the Monmouth collection of papers, published her Nelson, the most detailed description of the man to date.

The subsequent straight biographies by, respectively, Tom Pocock, Geoffrey Bennett, and Sir Arthur Bryant were, in the absence of fresh material, only of interest for the shifts of emphasis and occasional new insights.

Walder, of necessity, has followed the same pattern so, on the face of it, my question begs a negative answer, but it is not going to receive one from me, for to my surprise and delight I enjoyed his book tremendously and firmly intend to make time to re-read it.

Pops up everywhere

Everyone cannot be expected to feel the same way about this. If you have read Carola Oman's work, or indeed that of any of the three subsequent biographers I referred to, you may justifiably claim to know the Nelson story and wish to leave it at that, and I certainly wouldn't blame you.

I happen to be extremely interested in the momentous George III period, in which Nelson played a significant role, and for that reason I never tire of his story. No matter which aspect of the period one is studying, whether it be music, painting, literature, politcs, war, or social history, Nelson pops up again and again and so cannot ever be ignored.

In recent years many well-known writers have chosen to create a book out of one segment of the Nelson story. Ludovic Kennedy's excellent Nelson and His Captains (originally titled Nelson's Band of Brothers) dealt solely with his relationship with his subordinates. Dudley Pope, in The Great Gamble: Nelson at Copenhagen, concentrated on a single battle, as did David Howarth in his superbly readable Trafalgar: The Nelson Touch.

There are many more such books, dealing not only with naval battles but also with Sir William and Lady Hamilton, naval contemporaries, and with political events which Nelson's actions helped to shape. And there are the Hamilton papers and the Admiralty records.

There are two other main sources. References to Nelson are to be found in the literary works of such contemporaries as Charles Lamb, Samuel Taylor Coleridge, and Jane Austen, as well as later authors such as Thomas Hardy, Joseph Conrad, and even Bernard Shaw. And both Goethe and Casanova had plenty to say about the Hamiltons. In addition, practically everyone who met Nelson mentioned the occurrence and these observations are to be found in articles, diaries, memoirs, autobiographies and biographies.

So there is a mountain of material, and bits or chunks of it appear in all kinds of modern literature of a specialist nature. The result is that Nelson keeps being fragmented, so to speak, and between biographies the whole man tends to get lost.

For this reason I welcome each new biography, and I particularly welcome David Walder's book because his own background as historian, novelist, politician and political journalist has equipped him well for the job of presenting the fullest and most comprehensive study of the character and achievements of England's greatest national hero that has appeared for at least a quarter of a century.

Surprisingly little is known by the average reader about Nelson the man. Most writers have concentrated on his naval career and his liaison with Emma Hamilton at the expense of other aspects of his character. This gives a misleading picture by failing to explain inconsistencies of behavior. For instance, the first question to spring to mind is how this naval genius, who hardly ever made an unwise move when at sea, could become a complete fool and the object of ridicule and despair the moment he set foot on land.

Overweening ambition

Walder clearly, and with great sympathy, explains this by showing — perhaps 'revealing' is the correct word — how Nelson was dominated by an overweening ambition to be a hero (do you remember the famous remark at the Battle of the Nile: "Before this time tomorrow I shall have gained a peerage, or Westminster Abbey") and how he used every opportunity to gain promotion.

But when he had finally arrived as the supremely successful battle commander he was plagued by doubts, offended by slights real and imaginary, and had become a byword for both intrepid courage and personal vanity.

Nelson's personal life is examined in great detail: the origins of the Nelson family and its connection with the famous Walpoles, Horatio's upbringing in the vicarage at Burnham Thorpe, his marriage to Fanny and their first years of happiness shattered by his infatuation with Emma, a woman with a past but no future. The notorious affair is studied, as it should be, within the context of the intrigues of the corrupt Neapolitan court dominated by Austrian-born Queen Maria Carolina.

Tolerant gentleman

We have been schooled into believing that Sir William Hamilton was nothing but a mediocre ambassador and an elderly cuckold, but Walder has studied him with compassion and presents him convincingly as a tolerant 18th century gentleman, almost as fond of Nelson as was his wife. He must have been, because the relationship continued after this astonishing trio returned to England from Naples. Fanny was finally rejected and the old threesome bought a house where, after Sir William's death, Nelson's illegitimate daughter Horatia joined her parents.

The Nelson-Lady Hamilton affair is fascinating to read about, but it is a side issue and, unlike some previous biographies, Walder knows when to stop. After all, the 158-feet-tall monument in London's Trafalgar Square wasn't erected to mark Nelson's romantic exploits. So a great deal of space is given to the sailor, Vice-Admiral Horatio Nelson (due to the odd system of promotion he never became a full admiral), the small (he was only five feet two inches tall) naval genius who, metaphorically, towered above his contemporaries.

Walder graphically explains what distinguished Nelson from all other admirals, how he introduced a new concept of naval warfare which aimed at total destruction of the enemy, and he describes, with freshness and immediacy, how he gained his three great victories at the Nile, Copenhagen, and Trafalgar.

All biographies of Nelson are impressive because, despite his human frailties, he was an outstanding hero in an heroic age. What makes Walder's work particularly impressive is the immense pains he has taken to place his hero in proper perspective by showing him as part of his age, instead of isolated from it, as is usually done.

And what an age it was! England was assailed on all sides, by the loss of the American colonies, constant threats from France and Spain to possessions in the West Indies and, above all, by the aftermath of the French Revolution, which produced Napoleon — who dominated Europe, assembled a large army and a fleet of barges to invade England, actually invaded the Middle East and threatened India, and then invaded Russia. (The scenario would be repeated some 140 years later by Hitler.)

Napoleon could only be defeated finally on land (and Wellington was waiting in the wings) but Pitt, England's prime minister, well understood that supremacy at sea was the essential prelude. The Nile, Copenhagen, and Trafalgar victories were directly responsible for the changing political and military alliances which made possible the decisive battle of Waterloo. And only Nelson, who had the 'touch', could have achieved this.

To say that no one is indispensable has become a figure of speech, but at that moment in history Horatio Nelson was.

Momentous happenings

David Walder makes the reader feel present at all these momentous happenings as he steers him skilfully through the intricacies of Nelson's sea battles, but he also never lets one forget that other momentous things were occuring at the same time: Doctor Johnson was going about his business, Wordsworth was writing his poetry, Beethoven and Haydn were composing their heavenly music, Romney and Constable were painting masterpieces, and Jane Austen was busy providing posterity with her unequalled descriptions of 18th century middle class behavior.

In addition to giving us an outstanding portrait of Nelson the man and Nelson the naval genius, an unusually vivid presentation of a national hero, shorn of myth and exaggeration, Walder has also supplied a balanced view of the world in an age of endurance and hope. The book is thoroughly satisfying and, despite its outrageously high price, merits a wide success.

A Journey From 'Intelligent Misfit' to Feminist

By JAN ROSSLEY

The dust-cover for Alix Kates Shulman's Burning Questions tells us this book is "the largest, most authentic and sweeping novel we have yet had about the modern feminist experience." Don't be alarmed: this is not the Women's Liberation Movement's answer to Gone With the Wind. It is a story, told in the first person, about a woman who wanted to be a part of the passion of her time.

Written in the form of a memoir titled, "My Life As A Rebel, by Zane," the novel has us follow this intelligent misfit through her childhood in a small midwestern town to her coming of age in New York (because history is made there), where she wholeheartedly rushes into the contemporary scene.

Because she arrives in the fifties, the scene is filled with a group of people devoting their lives to being misfits called "beatniks", and Zane decides to call herself one too.

Not being as successful as she could wish, Zane decides to give up being a beatnik and instead becomes a wife and mother. Since Zane has not given up her misfit standing, things still don't work out and she becomes a flower child-earth momma.

Times change, and Zane, determined to be a part of the times, changes as well, until she emerges as the final culmination of all her past selves — a feminist.

Here, in the company of other feminists, she finds her hopes, her answers, herself. Voila! Personal fulfilment — a happy ending. All that's needed now is for Zane's face to appear on the cover of Time.

Zane is a fine creation, but she views herself and her events in a way that is too general and vague to be believable in a character who was initially so carefully drawn. It looks as though Shulman did not think Zane's personal visions grand enough to fill her character and decided to broaden them to include the more universal views of the women's movement.

This is when Zane ceases to be a whole person and becomes a fragment, and the novel begins to sink into overstatement. The child Zane, surrounded by the garden's tea roses, digging madly, knowing sooner or later she would reach China, speaks to us more than the flawless woman, surrounded by a bevy of admirers, who emerges at the end of the novel.

Shulman, author of Memoirs of an Ex-Prom Queen, has a writing style that fluctuates. There are times in Burning Questions when it reads almost like a "woman's magazine" but often her timing is perfect. Zane finds her first truly fulfilling love affair is with another woman. She is euphoric and proud that she has finally overcome this last dependence on men. Her euphoria is short-lived, however, when she remembers she must telephone her husband and tell him why she is going to be late.

Burning Questions contains a lot of insights about what it was like growing up into womanhood in the fifties and sixties, and it has some very funny moments. This is what Shulman does well, but the reader is bound to be annoyed by the flippant way she handles her characters and the action of the novel.

It's like nervously scanning a magazine in a dentist's office; you only do it to take up time. When someone is writing in the first person, you're supposed to believe her, but one seldom believes Zane. She wanders in and out of her various experiences as one would travel through a premarked maze. She's only pretending she doesn't know the way and you feel she has ended each chapter with, "but of course."

The subject of Burning Questions is too important to be managed with this superficiality. Shulman does not satisfy us. Perhaps she felt she had to write the novel the dust-jacket told us about, or maybe she felt she needed to create a woman who would be called the epitome of her age. It doesn't work. No single person can be the voice that speaks for an entire movement, for two decades.

Beer Flows In, More on Way

The beer's here!

The first of some 18,000 dozen cases of American suds began unloading in Victoria liquor stores this morning, and more is on the way.

Four or five stores should be well stocked with a variety of beer brands at least for a short time.

Liquor Distribution Branch (LDB) official Janet Willson said in Vancouver today the trucks were rolling and the beer should be on the shelf by this afternoon at the latest.

A Victoria branch spokesman, however, said that not all stores will get some of the beer.

Certain to get a portion of the latest shipment were outlets at Cedar Hill, Yates, in Langford and at Gorge and Tillicum.

It was going fast, though. The Fort-Foul Bay outlet sold out its allotment of 2,400 dozen cases in an hour, an official said today.

The LDB announced last week that it was bringing in 750,000 cases over and above the regular shipments of Olympia and Schlitz.

How long Victoria's 18,000 cases will last is anybody's guess.

Willson said the branch is already arranging for more beer, "but that probably won't be in until late next week because of the Monday holiday."

Meanwhile, people who wanted to import their own were getting the royal treatment at five U.S. border crossings south of Vancouver.

Quick check-out lanes were being set up to speed beer-lovers through customs.

Vince Castonguay, Vancouver manager for Canada Customs, said Thursday that 21 temporary staff have been

CANADIANS TRAVELLING OUTSIDE LESS

OTTAWA (CP) — Canadians were travelling outside the country less in June than a year earlier, while more foreign visitors made visits here, Statistics Canada reported Thursday.

There were 3.7 million U.S. visitors to Canada in June, a 4.2 per cent increase from a year ago. Visitors from other countries increased in number by 14.1 per cent to 231,000 in June.

The number of Canadians returning from U.S. visits in June was unchanged from June last year at 3.3 million. Canadian travellers returning from other countries totalled 121,500, a 1.1 per cent decrease from last June.

U.S. Jobless Up

WASHINGTON (Reuter) — The Carter administration received more bad economic news today, with federal government statistics showing a sharp rise in the rate of U.S. unemployment during July, when it stood at 6.2 per cent of the work force.

Bus Chaos Mars Day 1 Of Games

EDMONTON (CP) — Visitors to the Commonwealth Games and 70,000 work-bound Edmontonians scrambled for taxis, joined car pools or used their hitch-hiking thumbs today when they woke up to find the city temporarily without transit service because of strike action.

The transportation chaos was expected to end this afternoon after the provincial board of industrial relations granted an application by the City of Edmonton for a cease-and-desist order to the transit workers, compelling them to return to work immediately.

The board order came shortly before 10 a.m. PDT, about six hours after the picket lines were set up.

The Games were heading into their first competition day after Thursday's official opening by the Queen when striking electrical workers employed by this city of a half million population set up picket lines about 4 a.m. PDT at car barns.

The transit system, including the new seven-kilometre light rail transit line that goes right past Commonwealth Stadium, carried more than 40,000 persons to the opening ceremonies at the stadium.

The athletes faced no transportation problem as they were using school buses operated by private companies.

Yellow Cab, the city's major taxi company, sent 480 of its 500 cars out this morning after hearing the news.

Public reaction was mostly negative.

One individual, angry with the electricians' actions, decided to take matters into his own hands.

Just before 7 a.m., the man, cursing at the top of his lungs, drove his car at picketing electrical workers near a city bus garage. Although he did not hit anyone, he grabbed at one striker's picket sign and came so close to another that the worker spilled a cup of coffee.

The man drove about a block, turned his vehicle around and made another run at the workers.

Queen Elizabeth quietly wrapped up the ninth day of her Canadian tour Thursday, meeting Commonwealth Games volunteer officials at an evening reception after officially opening the Games earlier in the day.

Meanwhile, in London, Premier Peter Lougheed of Alberta was criticized by the Daily Telegraph for his behavior while in the company of the royal visitors.

After "two days of annoying behavior, Lougheed committed "the ultimate breach of etiquette" by joining the royal motorcade in an open-top car.

Moscow Wants Defector

VIENNA (Reuter) — Western diplomatic sources said today the Soviet Union has demanded the return of diplomat Arkadi Shevchenko, Moscow's top civil servant at the United Nations until he refused to go home last April, in exchange for Soviet dissident Anatoly Shcharansky.

The sources told Reuters news agency that Moscow, acting through East bloc intermediaries, proposed Shevchenko after a Soviet plan to swap Shcharansky for three Communist spies detained in the West ran aground.

However, Shevchenko today ridiculed the reported proposal, U.S. lawyer said.

"He laughed when I called him and told him about it; he said it's ridiculous," the Washington lawyer said.

Shevchenko, 47, was serving as UN undersecretary-general for political and Security Council affairs when he refused to return home in April and dropped out of sight in the United States, complaining of differences of opinion with the Kremlin.

His lawyer commented: "You don't exchange free men for prisoners. He has no interest or desire to return to the Soviet Union. He is a free man here and our government has no right whatsoever to bargain for any exchange concerning him. I think it's preposterous."

Most Flights Normal

Canadian Press

Air Canada ground-service workers in Toronto and most airports in the Atlantic provinces returned to work today, ending a walkout that disrupted airline operations in most of Eastern Canada and parts of the northern United States for two days.

About 1,700 workers in Toronto returned to work midnight Thursday night and 200 workers in Halifax, Fredericton, St. John's, Nfld., and Stephenville, Nfld., returned to work today.

Although 3,600 workers in Montreal have extended their walkout to Saturday, airline spokesman Jocelyn Dumont-Jerome said service is expected to be normal in Montreal.

She said 102 flights, about 85 per cent of scheduled flights, were to operate today. Passengers who were to go on flights that were cancelled will be put on other flights.

About 160 clerical and management personnel are doing the work of the ground-service employees today, she said.

Earlier Thursday in Vancouver, a spokesman for ground-service workers in western Canada said they will not engage in any work stoppages until results of a ratification vote on the company's latest contract offer are known.

Operations were almost normal in the East, although workers in Saint John, N.B., left the job early today. An Air Canada spokesman said supervisory personnel were being used to maintain normal operations there.

Four flights into the Maritimes, however, were cancelled because of the continuing walkout in Montreal and four flights to Montreal from the Maritimes also were cancelled.

Thorpe Charged With Murder Plot

LONDON (Reuter) — Jeremy Thorpe, former leader of the British Liberal party, was charged today with conspiracy to commit murder, a police spokesman said.

In the biggest political scandal to rock British politics in recent years, Thorpe, 49, was charged with conspiring with three others to kill a former friend, one-time male model Norman Scott.

Thorpe, who resigned from the Liberal leadership in May, 1976, after holding the post since 1967, has always strenuously denied allegations of a homosexual affair with Scott.

He resigned from the job five months after Scott, 35, said in a courtroom outburst that he was being hounded because they once had an affair.

The charges were filed at the west England port of Minehead, not far from Scott's home, the police spokesman said.

The spokesman identified those charged with Thorpe as David Holmes, 47, former deputy treasurer of the Liberal party; John le Mesurier, 44, a businessman, and George Deakin, a businessman from South Wales.

The spokesman said all four would appear in court later today at Minehead.

A brief police statement said the four "were taken into custody at Minehead police station and have been charged with conspiracy to murder Mr. Norman Scott."

The charges came after a long police investigation into allegations that the four men plotted to kill Scott.

In October, 1977, former airline pilot Andrew Newton told newspapers he had been paid $10,000 by a prominent Liberal supporter to kill Scott.

"I was hired to kill Scott because his story of a homosexual relationship with Thorpe would be disastrous," he claimed.

Even after Thorpe resigned as leader of Britain's third-largest party in 1976, he remained one of his party's 13 members of Parliament and its spokesman on foreign affairs.

Only last Wednesday he made an impassioned speech on Rhodesia to the House of Commons.

MPs have no immunity against criminal charges.

The scandal could have a dramatic effect on the outcome of the general election expected in October, since the Liberals have held the balance of power in Parliament for more than four years.

Today, with a policeman sitting on either side of him, Thorpe was driven from his Devon constituency to Minehead to be charged.

Purchase Pushes Dollar

MONTREAL (CP) — The Canadian dollar gained on New York money markets for the first time in more than a week Thursday after a private corporation bought heavily into the sagging currency.

The dollar closed at 88.09 cents U.S. in active trading on the inter-bank wholesale market.

Traders said the Montreal-based corporation had a surplus of American funds on hand and exchanged them for "$50 million to $100 million."

The dollar had been declining in value against its American counterpart since July 25 and reached a three-month low Wednesday.

Meanwhile, the United States dollar dropped slightly on the European and Japanese foreign-exchange markets today, while gold opened lower but gained as the dollar slipped.

Gold, after opening in London at $201 U.S. an ounce, rose to $201.35 at the morning price fixing by the five major bullion dealers. The closing price Thursday was $202.75.

And in New York a stock buying spree Thursday set a Wall Street volume record and pushed stock prices to their highest levels of the year.

"I think we are having the greatest buying panic we have ever seen in the market," said Alan Poole, an analyst.

Huge Settlement Ends Bennett Dam Case

VANCOUVER (CP) — One of the longest cases in Canadian legal history ended Thursday when British Columbia Hydro agreed to pay six companies a total of $33.95 million for extra expenses incurred during construction of the W. A. C. Bennett Dam.

The out-of-court settlement came six months before the 11-year-old Peace River power plant damage suit was to go before the Supreme Court of Canada.

Hydro officials refused to elaborate on a terse, four-sentence statement by company chairman Robert Bonner announcing the settlement. Bonner was not available for comment.

A consortium of six companies which built the underground powerhouse at Hydro's Peace River dam launched the action in 1967 claiming extra payment of $51 million for alleged interference by Hydro after contract prices were set for the Portage Mountain section of the project.

The companies, under the name of Northern Powerplant Builders (NPB), said Hydro's interference caused construction delays putting them to additional expenses in completing the work by a contract deadline which Hydro refused to extend.

The NPB consortium included Morrison-Knudsen Company Inc., Morrison-Knudsen Company of Canada

Walt Disney to Rescue Confederation?

QUEBEC (CP) — Quebec Environment Minister Marcel Leger says the federal government has given Walt Disney Productions a $2-million contract to prepare television advertising to promote Canadian unity in Quebec's coming independence referendum.

"The federal government, via our token francophones who represent the tip of the iceberg of Anglo-Saxon power in the federal regime, already has a propaganda program with a $50-million budget including a project given to the Walt Disney firm at a cost of $2 million for televised advertising very soon," Leger said in an interview Thursday.

He gave no further details.

In Ottawa, a spokesman in Prime Minister Trudeau's office denied as "a fabrication" Leger's statement that the federal government is financing a TV advertising campaign against Quebec independence under contract to Walt Disney Productions, or that there is a $50 million federal propaganda budget.

The Canadian Unity Information Office said a similar report had surfaced earlier this year. "It surely isn't us and I haven't got a clue what that could possibly be," a spokesman said in reference to the TV campaign.

Leger said the pro-independence side in the referendum campaign faces five chief obstacles: the massive opposition of English-speaking voters, hostility from the business world, federal intervention, "negative" action from the news media and, among pro-independence forces, overconfidence, lack of organization and discipline.

"The banks, finance companies, insurance companies, employers' groups, chambers of commerce and big companies . . . are getting their personal interests mixed up with the interests of Quebecers.

"And their influence is very great because they use their position to influence public opinion.

The federal government unity office, set up last year, has an annual budget of $10 million. Other departments and agencies are pouring additional millions into the propaganda war, including such items as the $4.5 million spent on Dominion Day festivals this summer.

She's No Geritol Junkie But a School Girl — at 74

By LORRAINE LOCHERTY
Times Staff

Only laughter from the children in the street and a cool breeze ruffled the concentration of the elementary summer school students hunched over their desks.

They were determined to finish their last assignment, an arithmetic quiz, and then get outside and enjoy what was left of the holidays.

A shrill laugh crackled through the stillness and the spell was broken.

But the instigator was no 10-year-old relegated to the classroom for the summer vacation to brush up on school work.

It was was 74-year-old May Robinson who couldn't contain her mirth when she spotted the photographer crouched a few feet away taking her picture.

To May, who starts high school in September, nothing could be more natural than sitting in summer school brushing up on her arithmetic.

She scoffs at the idea she's too old to embark on an educational odyssey she hopes will take her through high school and eventually university.

The adventure is someting she planned on doing after she raised her family which includes a son who is a school principal and a daughter who is a university professor.

For the past four weeks she has delighted the kids at George Jay Elementary school with an enthusiasm that has baffled her teachers.

The indefatigable lady is a human dynamo that summer school teacher Bill Wile found hard to control at first.

"It took me two weeks to figure out how to handle her," he confessed. "But I laid down a few ground rules and things are going pretty well."

May, who left her arithmetic quiz for a few minutes to talk about her new lifestyle, is very convincing when she says she has enough stamina to make it through.

"Look at me, I have lots of energy," she stated emphatically, her blue eyes blazing.

"I walk 10 miles a day, swim three times a day and ride my horse. I haven't felt sick in years.

"I've been praying for this for 60 years."

May is starting Grade 8 in the fall and plans to enter college.

"They wanted to put me in Grade 10, but I don't have arithmetic. I could't do all that math and trigonometry so I'm going to start in Grade 8."

The kids have taken to their new schoolmate and talk to her by the hour.

"They wait for me after school," says May, obviously impatient to get back in the classroom and finish her test.

"If you want to know anything else, just call me or come on over to the house. But don't come over today — I'm hitch-hiking to Port Renfrew after school," she said over her shoulder and headed back to her work.

FAMILY'S HOLIDAYS WRECKED BY THIEF

Sometime overnight Tuesday the culprit crept into the Burrys' carport beneath their townhouse at 2409 Chambers and made off with their tent trailer.

That may not sound much of a loss to most families. But to Darlene Burry it represented all her savings.

Mrs. Burry, 37, a welfare mother of three, saved two-and-a-half years to buy the small green fold-down trailer.

She'd only used it a couple of times. The last time was late in July when she took her family — Glen, 18, Patty, 14, and Sherri, 11 — to Goldstream Park for a weekend outing.

When they returned they didn't bother unpacking their gear because they planned to leave shortly for a week-long stay at the provincial park at Caycuse on Lake Cowichan.

The thief took everything — the family's sleeping bags, propane stove, lanterns, mattresses, and other odds and ends that Mrs. Burry had scrimped and saved to purchase over the years.

The problem is because of her low income she says she was only able to afford minimum insurance. It didn't cover theft.

"I don't know what we're going to do now," she says. "That trailer was everything to us. You can't save much on welfare. For years we did without a lot of things just so we could get the means to have a holiday every now and then like everyone else."

Fast-Paced Schedule Faces Philip, Andrew

For many in Victoria the weekend will be spit 'n' polish time, in readiness for a VIP visit Monday which will lend a royal touch to the Captain Cook festivities.

Prince Philip — a bit of an old salt himself — and his younger son Prince Andrew will be whisked through a round of receptions, ceremonies and visits during their day here.

After travelling from the Commonwealth Games in Edmonton they arrive at Patricia Bay airport at 11:30 a.m., to be greeted by Lieutenant-Governor Henry Bell-Irving, Mrs. Bell-Irving, deputy premier Grace McCarthy and local officials. The welcome takes place at the provincial government hangar on the industrial side of the airport.

The royal visitors will then be driven to the Legislative Buildings via the Pat Bay Highway, Douglas and Belleville, arriving at noon. This is probably the best opportunity for the public to get a glimpse of them.

Premier and Mrs. Bennett will meet the Duke of Edinburgh and Prince Andrew at the Menzies side of the buildings and escort them to the main steps before inviting Prince Philip to inspect the guard of honor mounted by the Esquimalt-based Third Candian Fleet School commanded by Lt.-Cdr. David Williams.

Following the inspection and a welcoming address by the premier, the Bennetts will escort the royal visitors to the cenotaph at the corner of Government and Belleville, for a 12.25 p.m. departure to a reception and luncheon at the wardroom, CFB Esquimalt.

The drive from the Legislative Buildings to Esquimalt will be along Wharf, Esquimalt and Admirals.

At 2.15 p.m. the party will return via the same route to Fort, and then to Cook, Rockland and Government House.

At 3 p.m. invited guests, many of them new Canadians, will attend a garden party at Government House. Prince Philip then returns to the Legislative Buildings at 4.30 to present Duke of Edinburgh awards to 25 recipients in the legislative chamber.

At 5:20 he will leave, by way of Belleville and Douglas, for a concert presented by the Victoria Symphony in the Cameron Bandshell at Beacon Hill Park.

The return to Government House at 5:55 will be via Cook and Rockland.

An official dinner at Government House attended by about 150 guests will end the day.

Prince Philip and his son will leave Government House at 9:30 a.m. Tuesday to drive to the airport. The route will be via Rockland, Cook, Pandora, Quadra and the Pat Bay Highway.

Province Approves Camosun Project

The provincial treasury board today approved $600,000 for preconstruction work at Camosun College's Lansdowne facility and has indicated approval in principle for an $8.5 million renovation and construction project to modernize the aging campus.

College council chairman Janet Baird said she is delighted.

The council has been trying all summer to get the funds in time to avert a space shortage this fall, she said.

"We'll have to work like mad now to get everything ready," Baird said.

The college plans to use part of the preconstruction money to build four portable classrooms and to renovate and the neighboring Paul Building and Tolmie Elementary School which it has leased from the Greater Victoria School District.

The treasury board has allocated $85,000 for the project manager, $325,000 for the architect's design fee, $40,000 for ground preparation, $100,000 for temporary accommodation and $50,000 for renovations to the Paul Building.

The treasury board also indicated approval in principle for a total $8.5 million renovation and construction package

Included is a multi-purpose building at a cost of $6 million.

The treasury board has approved in principle: renovations totalling $1.2 million to the Young and Ewing buildings on campus, an additional $650,000 for fees and permits, ground improvements and parking facilities at a cost of $250,000 and further alterations to the Paul Building for $150,000.

Stevie Was Different: Now He's Locked Up

By DEREK SIDENIUS
Times Staff

Born with brain damage, he was a slow learner. He didn't utter his first word until he was six. His physical development was years behind his peer group. The doctors said he was hyperkinetic.

He learned to walk and ride a bike early but when it came to something he had to concentrate on, he couldn't do it.

He went to school because the law required him to go, but after nine years in special classes, he didn't learn anything. The kids teased him, especially the girls, who'd pick him up because he was so tiny and squeeze him. They thought it was funny. Stevie didn't.

He realized he was different. To escape, he'd retire to his bedroom, pull the sheets over his head and go to sleep.

As he entered his teens he began to display uncontrollable impulses. His parents grew concerned, cried out for help, but there was none available.

Stevie (not his real name) had his first brush with the law when he was 13. He was charged with unlawfully confining a young girl in Victoria. For that he was placed on one year's probation.

When he was 15 he was accused — his parents say wrongly — of assaulting a girl near his home. The Crown stayed the charge.

Then last April, when he was 16, he was picked up after an 11-year-old girl had been stabbed in an apparent attempted robbery in Saanich. The girls' wounds were not serious but police, psychologists and psychiatrists all concluded the boy was a menace, potentially dangerous.

He has been in custody since, at the Juvenile Detention Home in Victoria, Willingdon in Burnaby and Woodlands in New Westminster.

There is no where else to put him.

In an unprecedented move this week Judge Lawrence Brahan in family court finally ordered the boy to live in the JDH for an indefinite period while he undergoes treatment.

The order, tantamount to incarceration, was in the form of a term of probation since the provincial government has no authority to jail juvenile offenders.

Stevie's parents don't blame the judge.

In an interview Thursday night, they said the judge had little choice because there is no facility in the province to treat troubled adolescents who require containment.

Since Stevie's arrest, government officials have agonized over what to do with him.

He's undergone four psychological examinations in Victoria and Vancouver.

The recommendations were essentially the same. Stevie should be placed in a closed treatment centre.

The question was where?

Dr. Jim Ricks of the provincial health ministry's integrated services branch suggested the boy be sent to a centre in Ontario, but human resources refused on the grounds it was not their policy to send juveniles to another province for treatment.

UBC professor Dr. Marjorie Chabot, an eminent psychologist, felt the boy needed a closed setting but stipulated it should be in Victoria because of the boy's close relationship with his parents.

The province has no facilities to treat a dangerously disturbed teen-ager, so what do you do? Lock him up — indefinitely?

Both the provincial and Greater Victoria Children-in-Crisis committees met to try to find a place to put him. The case was brought before the government's interministerial committee, and both the family court committee and municipal committee dealing with the JDH held emergency meetings to attempt to resolve the problems.

Stevie's parents said they had hoped to get their boy into Eric Martin Institute.

But two weeks ago, three officials of the hospital together with their lawyer appeared before Brahan to explain EMI couldn't take Stevie because it didn't have a treatment centre for adolescents.

They said they had an empty ward that could be used for such a purpose but the ministry of health has refused to supply additional funds to permit the hospital to acquire staff to run it.

Stevie, they said, couldn't be placed in an adult closed ward because the patients there are psychotic; nor could he placed in the children's custodial ward because the parents would be upset having their children exposed to a boy deemed assaultive and dangerous.

Stevie's parents said Brahan was backed into a corner and frustrated because of the lack of facilities.

In handing down his sentence, he placed the boy on three years probation, the conditions of which are that he should live in the JDH and receive psychological, vocational and educational guidance under the direction of Dr. Ricks.

Stevie's parents wonder what's going to happen when their son turns 17 next February.

They wonder too, with the precedent now set, whether the JDH will be turned into a kind of treatment centre.

Their son is placed in a concrete-lined cell, with a cot and a small table. Wire mesh covers the tiny window in the cell door.

Although they praised the staff at JDH, they said the facility isn't acceptable for long-term care.

"How can the government just sit back and act the way they are. Their policies are terrible. They have facilities to treat adults and small kids, but nothing for adolescents anywhere in the province.

"We can't believe out son is the only child on Vancouver Island who needs treatment with containment.

"This experience — it's broken our spirits and our hearts . . . but he's still our boy . . . we're going to stand behind him."

CP Getting Conscience?

The Canadian Pacific Railway, historically speaking, has not been at all reluctant to exploit Canada's natural resources. But all of a sudden it seems to have developed a corporate conscience in this respect.

Consider the discreet little card from CP Hotels which appeared on dining tables at The Empress within the last few days.

It reads: "In order to conserve our natural resources, water will be served only upon request. Thank you for your co-operation."

Asked if some customers have been cynical enough to suggest that the hoped-for saving has more to do with dishwashing costs, manager Ted Balderson says there has been "some good-natured rib tickling" on the subject.

The policy is in effect at many of the CP hotels and for a couple of years the water-on-request service has been in widespread use throughout the United States, he claims.

"Let's face it, we're not energy conscious at all in this country," said Balderson — apparently in all seriousness. "One day we will pay for it."

The provincial agriculture ministry has launched — the only appropriate word — a floating p.r. campaign designed to emphasize the importance of farming in B.C.

It has installed on several B.C. Ferries vessels plying between Vancouver Island and the mainland a series of photographic displays, each depicting one sector of the agricultural industry such as ranching, dairy farming, poultry and tree fruits.

"I feel it is important for consumers to realize the importance of agriculture in their own province," says Agriculture Minister Jim Hewitt.

"The displays also tell our visitors what food production in B.C. is all about. We are able to deliver a top-quality product, so let's show them how we produce it."

Michael Riddell, 23, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ross Riddell, 115 Island Highway, has found his own way of celebrating the Captain Cook bi-centennial.

He's decided to discover the rest of Canada.

He left Victoria on his 10-speed bicycle May 14 and, making several detours, intends to make his way to St. John's Nfld.

His father says Riddell will have cycled at least 5,500 miles before he packs his bike and catches the train back to the west coast in time to attend classes at the University of Victoria.

Forty British Columbia Fellows of the Royal Society of Arts have been invited to meet Prince Philip at a garden party, to be held at Government House on Monday.

Sqdn-Ldr. Clarence Goode, B.C.'s honorary corresponding member, says the oldest Fellow attending the garden party will be George Brown who is 100 and a patient at the Memorial Pavilion.

The prince is the society's president.

Meet the new streamlined Bob McClelland.

B.C.'s health minister is sporting a new look, a new attitude, and setting a good example for paunchy British Columbians.

In just three months McClelland has shed 50 pounds from his 5-foot-9 frame, and now weighs a well-proportioned 165 pounds.

McClelland said he stopped smoking and drinking, cut out fattening foods, and started exercising.

He says he never felt better.

It wasn't his intention to set an example for the province but if that's the way it turns out, he'll be happy.

First the concrete sidewalk was laid and then the concrete sidewalk — or at least 20 feet of it — was pulled up again a short time later.

Residents of Cloverdale Avenue must have wondered what on earth was happening on the south side of the road near the Cloverdale-Blanshard intersection.

It seems this wasn't a fit of indecision on the part of the contractor for the Blanshard extension project, but just a plain, honest-to-goodness goof by someone in Saanich municipal hall.

Deputy municipal engineer George Gunn says the sidewalk had to be taken up to install a sewer line that was omitted from earlier plans for the highway alterations.

"It was an error on our part it was not put in sooner," he said.

There's no immediate dollar figure on the goof but Gunn says as the highways department has more work to do in the general area of the intersection, that may offset part of the cost.

A tongue-in-cheek report of Captain Cook's kidnapping is being officially labelled theft by the city police.

The "victim" is a life-size blow-up picture of Kelvin Andrew, one of the Captain Cook stand-ins for the bicentennial, which disappeared from the lobby of the Rithet Building on Wharf Street, home of the Captain Cook committee offices.

The seven by three feet picture cost $200 but one official said today they believe the heist was "a light-hearted affair."

The local company sponsored three Calgarians who won Edmonton's Smokie River Race and the Klondike 300 in the 'E' class inflatables.

Neil Sanger, Nelson Brinson and Jim Sutton won 37 trophies by beating the previous record by almost four hours.

A skateboard rink at Esquimalt's Anderson Park will be ready by the middle of the month and semi-retired travel agent George Willis is organizing a skateboarding club.

Two groups, one for children up to 12 years of age and one for 13 to 17-year-olds will be formed for safety, competition and prizes.

A meeting to determine rules and regulations will be held Friday, Sept. 1.

Victoria residents growing lavender in their gardens have a chance to lend a hand to the Royal Jubilee Hospital Auxiliary.

The auxiliary's handicraft group could use any lavender that can be spared. The lavender should be left in a bag at the hospital's gift ship and labelled Mrs. Elsie Green.

today's markets

Toronto

TORONTO (CP) — Rising energy issues sent the Toronto stock market moderately higher today in active mid-session trading.

A trading halt was issued about 1 p.m. in shares of D'Eldona Gold Mines Ltd. pending a statement from the company. In earlier trading, the stock dropped 17 cents to $1.23 a share on the sale of 207,000 shares.

Trading halts continued in shares of Universal Gas Co. Ltd. and Monarch Life Assurance Co.

Aquitaine Co. of Canada Ltd. has announced it will offer $12 a share for all outstanding shares of Universal Gas, which closed Thursday at $10½ a share.

Monarch Life, last at $34½ a share, was halted about 11 a.m. EDT for the second time in three days. Tuesday's halt was issued for dissemination of news that United Canadian Shares Ltd. planned a $55-a-share offer for a minimum of 80 per cent of the company's 520,000 shares.

Among other industrials, Falconbridge Nickel Mines A jumped 2¼ to $29, Canadian Tire 1¼ to $26¾, Crown Trust 1 to $43, Dalmys A 1 to $8½ and B.C. Packers B 1 to $59.

New York

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market rose in active trading today, but neither its rise nor its volume matched the levels achieved earlier this week.

Analysts said the market seemed unaffected by two pieces of less-than-good economic news: Thursday's report by the Federal Reserve Board that the country's basic money supply had risen by $2.7 billion in the latest reporting week; and a labor department announcement that June unemployment had risen to 6.2 per cent from May's 5.7 per cent.

Montreal

MONTREAL (CP) — Prices were generally higher in moderate tradingtoday on the Montreal Stock Exchange.

Price Ltd. advanced ⅛ to $15⅛, Imperial Oil A ⅜ to $21⅛, Trans-Canada PipeLines ⅛ to $17⅜, Alcan ⅜ to $36¼, Labatt A ¼ to $22, Bank of Montreal ¼ to $23¼, Zeller's A ¼ to $10¼ and B.C. Telephone ¼ to $17. Dofasco A dipped ⅛ to $28⅞, CP Ltd. ⅛ to $21¼, Montreal Trust ⅛ to $18 and Brascan A ⅛ to $16¼.

Among speculative issues, Aldona Mines slid two cents to $1.01 on a turnover of 5,500 shares.

London

LONDON (CP) — The London stock market was moderately lower today near the close of light trading.

The Financial Times index closed at 487.2, up 2.7.

HOW TO WRITE

A GOOD

CLASSIFIED ACTION AD

1—IT'S BEST to start your ad with the name of the article or service you have to offer. If you have an apartment, room etc., for rent, or property for sale: start your ad with the location.

2—BE CLEAR. Readers respond more quickly and favorably when given complete, definite information. Always include the price in your adveertisement.

3—MAKE IT EASY for the reader-prospect to reach you. Always give your telephone number or your name and address. If you do not have regular hours, state a preferred time for the prospect to get in touch with you.

4—PLAY SAFE. You get the greatest reader attention by using consecutive insertions. A six-day order is best and costs less, and you can, of course, stop your ad as soon as you get the results you want. You pay only for the days your ad appeared. Lower yearly rates are available to those who wish to keep their services or products before the public.

5—PLACE YOURSELF in the reader's position and ask yourself what you want to know about your offer. The answer you give will make a good Want Ad.

6—GIVE YOUR PROSPECT every inducement you can with good copy. Classified action ad readers have the money and are already interested in buying the merchandise or service you have to offer; the details and information you give are the most important.

7—TO PLACE YOUR AD, call 386-2121, your direct line number to fast Want Ad action. A courteous, efficient advisor will be glad to help you word and place your order. And remember, Classified Action Ads afford you the most complete coverage. Telephones are open 8:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. for you daily, Monday through Friday; 8:00 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Saturday. Don't allow the reader to speculate.

Polio Vaccine Shortage Denied

TORONTO (CP) — There is no shortage of one type of polio vaccine and there has been no accident at Connaught Laboratories Ltd., a Connaught spokesman said today.

Dr. Tony Larson, provincial epidemiologist in Vancouver, said Thursday supplies of Sabin vaccine might stop because of an unspecified accident at Connaught.

Anastasia Erland, public affairs officer at Connaught, said today that representatives from Connaught last week asked epidemiologists in each province to conserve supplies of the vaccine.

Connaught decided recently to start manufacturing vaccine from a new virus seed because of a new testing procedure. Because it takes months to produce a new batch of vaccine, Connaught requested that doctors conserve supplies, she said.

It is not unusual for a doctor to take a couple of doses out of the vial and toss the rest out, Mrs. Erland said.

Mrs. Erland said the Salk vaccine is just as effective as Sabin and that there is no shortage of Salk vaccine.

She said most doctors prefer Sabin vaccine because it is oral and easier to give. Salk vaccine must be injected.

She said it was discovered last week that Connaught's Sabin Type 3 vaccine did not meet the criteria set by an English company so Connaught, a worldwide distributor of the vaccine, decided it had to change its manufacturing procedure.

It took until this spring to decide to change the virus seed from which the live vaccine is produced, she said.

Meanwhile, more than 1,400 residents of Oxford County in Western Ontario attended a polio clinic Thursday in Norwich, near Woodstock, after two cases of the paralysing disease were diagnosed in the area.

The clinic was set up by the Oxford County board of health as a precaution after Reick Van Vliet, 24, and his brother, James, 14, were isolated in hospital in London, Ont., with what doctors diagnosed as polio.

Larry Arneill, acting director of health-inspection services for Oxford County, said about 1,400 doses of oral vaccine were administered in sugar cubes at the clinic.

Arneill said there will be additional clinics in Tillsonburg and Woodstock, probably next week.

Gary Kuney, a Norwich storeowner, said a growing resentment toward the Dutch community might develop because of fears about the disease.

"It's like a firecracker that has been lit," Kuney said.

"Right now, the disease seems to be contained with the Dutch people, but if it breaks out and infects other ethnic groups in the community, the firecracker is going to blow up."

M-B Ruled Negligent In Death

NANAIMO (CP) — A coroner's jury ruled Thursday that MacMillan Bloedel was negligent in the accidental death of David Ashby, 52, an employee at the company's Harmac pulp mill.

The jury said the company had failed to follow certain safety regulations stipulated by the Workers Compensation Board.

Ashby, a company employee for 28 years, was killed July 17 when he fell through a hole in a mud filter hut's roof to the concrete floor about eight metres below. The pathologist's reports showed Ashby died instantly from severe brain damage.

He was apparently on the roof with a sledgehammer trying to loosen a buildup of lime around the stack when he broke through the roof.

A co-worker reported that before starting the work, Ashby reported that the roof was shaky.

John Maxwell, pulp mill inspector for the board, said regulations require that a temporary floor or platform be installed as close as possible to the working level in areas that would not safely hold the weight of the workers.

The roof was made of a building material called transite. The jury recommended that all working areas built with transite material be covered with an iron grill platform and that safety belts be used.

Collision Lands Trio In Hospital

Three men were treated at Royal Jubilee Hospital after their vehicles were heavily damaged in a collision at Lansdowne and Foul Bay at 7:25 a.m. today.

Oak Bay police said a pickup truck driven north on Foul Bay by Alexander Jossul, 1059 Oliver, collided with a car driven west on Lansdowne by Samuel Swetnam, 1420 Beach, causing $1,000 damage to the truck. The car was listed as a writeoff.

Flower Festival In Duncan

The fourth annual Festival of Flowers and Song opened today in the Cowichan Valley, at the same time as a week-long celebration of the Captain Cook bicentenary.

The festival of flowers, organized by the Duncan Downtown Business Association, opened this morning with the crowning of Festival Queen Mabel Flett, a member of the Duncan Old Age Pensioner Association.

Musical entertainment and puppet shows were scheduled this afternoon.

On Saturday, the annual festival parade will wend its way through Duncan. Included in the parade is the 60-piece Sea Cadet Band from HMCS Quadra in Comox.

Captain Cook celebrations include choir singing and square dancing for senior citizens at the forestry museum, a golf tournament at the Cowichan Golf Club, a 10-game bowling tournament at the Duncan Lanes, and the Cowichan Symphony's Garden Party Aug. 12.

Walkout Over Food

VANCOUVER (CP) — All work on British Columbia Hydro's Peace Canyon Dam near Hudson Hope shut down for the August holiday weekend 1½ days early after the 1,000 employees staged a walkout to protest the preparation of camp food.

The men quit work about noon Wednesday, and most left the dam site shortly thereafter in the wake of week-long suspicions that the 100 men who had become ill were victims of food poisoning.

Doctors have diagnozed the widespread sickness as viral influenza which has hit the northeastern B.C. communities of Hudson Hope and Fort St. John.

Today is a legal holiday for the B.C. construction industry.

Union officials, management personnel and the field supervisor for the Vancouver-based catering firm that runs the camp kitchen met Thursday and ironed out employee complaints about food service.

Construction workers on the $450 million dam first reported illness July 26. A representative of the Fort St. John Health Unit investigated the complaints Tuesday and three doctors then diagnosed the high fever, dizziness and muscle cramps as flu which also has hit many persons not living or eating in the camp.

Following a general meeting Wednesday morning, however, the men agreed not to return to work, and by noon chartered buses, originally scheduled to pick the men up at work's end Thursday, had arrived to take them to their holiday destinations.

"It appears they were just looking for a longer weekend," a management spokesman said.

The men are expected to return to work Tuesday morning.

Since the camp opened in February, 1975, labor disputes, most of them jurisdictional, have cost about 30 working days.

PORT ANGELES (AP) — The container ship Taiwan Phoenix was towed into port here Wednesday, en route to Seattle following a head-on collision last month about 1,000 kilometres south of Kodiak, Alaska.

Causeway Litter: The Profit Motif

Litter on the Inner Harbor Causeway may be shocking to some people but to Ald. Bill Tindall it smells a little bit like roses.

Tindall, chairman of city council's tourism committee, said Thursday he's heard plenty of complaints about the Causeway.

"But there's two sides to this, of course. It all depends on how you view it," he said.

"We have a mess because there's so many people down there enjoying the Causeway. If we didn't have the people, there'd be no mess.

"We spent an awful lot of money attracting people here — so let them make a mess. We'll clean it up."

He said the litter on the Causeway is a minor problem compared to the difficulties Victoria would be in if there were no tourists here to mess things up a little.

Council Sits on Fence On Neutron Bomb Ban

Victoria council's intergovernmental relations committee has wrestled with some weighty topics over the years but things got really heavy Thursday when they got into the neutron bomb issue.

Ald. Robin Blencoe wanted the committee to support a B.C. Peace Council resolution calling for the banning of the neutron bomb — but that sparked a battle with Ald. Murray Glazier.

Glazier moved that "council oppose the escalation of nuclear war and the killing of people and endorse international security."

Glazier said those were the really important matters — not neutron bombs.

"I'm not a military strategist; I don't know whether stopping production of this (neutron) weapon will achieve those ends."

Mayor Mike Young let that dispute rage for about two minutes and then cut off debate.

Young said the committee could endorse the B.C. Peace Council resolution, as have councils in Toronto and Vancouver, "but frankly this me-too-ism sickens me a little."

Young said if council members are really concerned about the issue then maybe they could come up with a resolution of their own.

With that Glazier withdrew his resolution concerning war and peace and the committee voted not to ban the neutron bomb.

Plastic Yule Holly

The look will definitely be artificial this Christmas, Victoria's downtown economic development committee decided Thursday.

City hall purchasing agent H.V. Robinson is soon going shopping for the town's Christmas decorations and before he placed any orders committee chairman Ald. Bill Tindall wanted to know whether the holly should be natural or artificial.

A number of aldermen earlier this year expressed a hope the holly could be home grown — but in a report Robinson recommended against it.

He said real holly would turn black at the first exposure to frost, the leaves would tend to blow off and securing the holly to a frame would be expensive.

"It is also possible the real holly intertwined with the electric lamps could create a fire hazard," he said.

Tindall said on the basis of that council should opt for the artificial, and after a brief discussion the committee agreed.

Bus Drivers In Limbo

B.C. Hydro transit workers wondering about their future when the system becomes a municipal responsibility won't get any answers from Victoria city hall.

Ald. Ron McKenzie raised the transit worker problem at a meeting of council's intergovernmental committee Thursday.

"What is their status going to be?" asked McKenzie. "Who are they going to be working for and what will their relationship be with city employees?"

City manager Jim Bramley said he didn't know the answers to those and a lot of other questions about the B.C. Urban Transit Authority Act.

"There are problems," said Bramley, ". . . we don't know what their situation is going to be. We've got problems with our own contract in relating to B.C. Hydro contracts too."

Added Mayor Mike Young: "I know the (Hydro) employees are concerned because obviously when you have such mismanagement of a mass transit every aspect is going to have to be re-examined."

But he said it is just too early for him to provide any answers.

Early Decision Promised On Quadra Highway Link

Highways Minister Alex Fraser has promised Saanich an early decision on the fate of a proposed highway link between the Patricia Bay Highway and North Quadra, which has been a bone of contention between the ministry and the municipality for several months.

Following a meeting with Fraser Thursday — a meeting he had been trying to arrange for four months — Couvelier said the minister assured him a reply would be forthcoming within three or four days.

Couvelier also said he believed he had been able to impress on Fraser the reasons for Saanich's objection to the highway connector.

"I left with the happy feeling that he at least understood what I was talking about," he said.

The highways planners in the ministry believe the future growth of Saanich and the Greater Victoria area will require an additional east-west artery, linking Roy Road, Vanalman and Beckwith-at-Quadra via an overpass spanning the Pat Bay Highway.

But Saanich maintains that the 80-foot right-of-way proposed is both unnecessary and a potential threat to residential areas in its path.

In the longer term, council members fear that after the east-west artery has reached Beckwith, on the western flank of the Blenkinsop Valley, there will be irresistible pressure to extend it further eastward in a damaging swath through the valley itself.

The conflict has resulted in a stalemate, with the ministry refusing to approve a major rezoning bylaw for the North Quadra area because Saanich had failed to provide planning protection for the right-of-way.

Couvelier said he tried in his meeting with Fraser to correct a fundamental misunderstanding which seems to prevail in the ministry.

"The technical people in the highways department seem to think that when we described the urban containment boundary as being sacrosanct we didn't really mean what we said.

"They envisage the Saanich of the future as border-to-border housing. Yet since the early 1960s council has been saying that all those areas lying outside the urban containment boundary will be forever greenbelt, and we will not violate that," he added.

Couvelier said he tried to convince Fraser and his associates that they should amend their classification of Saanich from urban to urban-rural.

Under that planning philosophy, the municipality would need major roads not on a one-mile grid pattern but a two-mile pattern.

He said he pointed out that there are already cross-Saanich routes at Royal Oak Avenue, Quadra and McKenzie, and argued that no more were necessary.

He also tried to persuade them to divert the $1 million that would be needed for the proposed Vanalman crossing to upgrading the Quadra overpass to a full-diamond layout.
